"It is your business and our business to give them (the newspapers) what they actually want and will use—not what someone in New York or elsewhere thinks they want."

On those two sentences hang all the law and the prophets of the relation of the photoplay to the newspaper.

But the Fox Bulletin does not content itself with generalities about motion picture publicity in newspapers.

It hits the nail squarely on the head by telling exhibitors and exchange men just where they can get co-operation and with whom.

Again we quote:

Nixola Daniels Discourses On Scenrioa Work

Author of "Destruction" Tells of Her Experiences When She Masqueraded In Man's Attire

"Don't lop around on sofa pillows, munch chocolates and scribble down platitudes on a piece of paper in the belief that you are writing a play," is the advice given to fair would-be scenario writers by Miss Nixola Daniels, author of "Destruction," the William Fox production. Miss Daniels, 28 years old, is the young woman who recently attracted so much attention in the public press when she was discovered working side by side with men in a huge Pennsylvania foundry, her ears concealed by a roomy pair of overalls and a felt hat pulled well down over her hair.

"If a girl must write photoplays," says Miss Daniels, "let her families be herself with the subject with which she is to deal. Whatever scenes I may have attained in photoplay writing has been because I have studied my subject before bringing paper even within speaking distance of my typewriter platen. How do you suppose I came to work for six long weeks in that Pennsylvania foundry? Actuated by a spirit of adventure? Oh, no! I'm no adventuress.

"I wanted to know all about foundry work in order to write "Destruction" the more intelligently. So I bought some overalls, rubbed dirt on my face, and went to the foundry and got a job. I worked there six weeks, and I know foundry work from A to Z. I know how to run the electric crane, how to work beneath the molten iron as it drops

Director Davis Advances Photoplay Technique

Bars Red and White From All Sets And Uses Orchestra To Aid Players In Studio Work

W. S. Davis, director of the William Fox productions "Destruction," was one of the first photoplay producers to banish white from the scenery, properties and costumes used in motion picture work. White, when photographed under the powerful electric violet rays of the studio lights, causes what is known as halation in the projected film. It shows off a theatre which renders various objects in the picture indistinct and which causes undue eye strain on the part of the audience.

Mr. Davis has substituted for white softer colors which do not produce this blinding effect in the finished picture. Blue, pink and yellow are the colors which he uses most. For instance, in the production which he directs, the man's dress shirt becomes one in a light blue, the ladies' handkerchiefs a light pink, and table linen and curtains a light yellow. All of these colors appear white when the film is shown on the screen.

Red is another color which Mr. Davis has blacklisted in studio work. The ultra violet lights cause red to photograph jet black.

Another studio innovation by Mr. Davis is the use of music in his productions. He has an orchestra to play appropriate music while the scenes are being taken. This helps the players to get into the spirit of the scenes in which they are working.

Theda Bara, William Fox star, was so severely burned by molten iron during the making of one of the scenes in "Destruction" that she fainted away and was under a physician's care for two weeks before being able to resume work. The accident occurred in a foundry and the scene being made was that in which Miss Bara as Ferdinande seeks out Steve and informs him of his wife's alleged indiscretions.

To lend realism to the picture the scene was taken while the foundry was in full operation, with molten metal pouring from the roaring stack, electric cranes moving beneath the

Mr. Lenard is frank in admitting that he received his idea for the forthcoming terpsichorean creation from the peculiar carriage displayed on the screen by Theda Bara, vampire woman of the William Fox films.

"The dance, as I now conceive it," explains Mr. Lenard, "will embody the various qualities which enter into the rythmic and almost seductive form of locomotion revealed by Miss Theda Bara in her screen portrayals. It will be a dance of allurement, in the main, word imply. I predict that the Vampire Walk will have the most instantaneous and wide-spread vogue of any so-called popular dance of the day. It will be simplicity itself. About the only study required for its mastery will be a close observation of the Vampire Walk as done by Miss

The newspaper publishers, editors and managers, "who team willingly with the picture industry" in Seattle and Los Angeles, are also named in the Fox Bulletin.

Then come these two paragraphs:

"With regard to publicity for feature pictures, take the time to go into newspaper offices and find out just what kind of pictures and stories they want.

"Towns differ. Maybe some papers are getting the kind of material they do not want."

Which is just what MOTION PICTURE NEWS has been advocating week in and week out. But when a picture manufacturer himself advocates it, not in glittering bursts of adjectives, but specifically, as Fox has done above, it means a distinct advance toward pulling picture publicity down from the clouds and getting it established on the firm ground of common sense.

There is only one way, as we have said before and as the Fox people recognize with insight commendably clear, to win the newspaper and keep it won to motion pictures, and that is: To treat the newspaper as a human being. The newspaper is not, and never will be, a permanent receptacle for flowery, adjective-buried stories, loaded with sweeping statements, and written by gentlemen, however estimable, who think a New York post mark the open sesame to a newspaper's heart.

Spirit of the Railroad Hard to Convey to Screen

President Hutchinson of the Signal Film Corporation Tells of Difficulties Encountered in Staging "The Girl and the Game," Featuring Helen Holmes

PUTTING a railroad novel on the screen, so that it will be convincing in its realism, requires uniform excellence in story, direction, and acting. How these problems were met in producing "The Girl and the Game," President Samuel S. Hutchinson, of the Signal Film Corporation and the American Film Company, Inc., tells in the following interview:

"In all rural and suburban communities

the people depend upon the railroad as a means of transportation. In the larger cities and the business centers of our civilization commerce depends upon the railroads.

"Capitalists watch the management and earnings of vast railroad properties as well as legislation, for or against them, as the chief barometer of the times. It can be well said that in the railroads beat the pulse of our national life. Therefore to portray a railroad story on the screen requires that those who attempt it, be the best in their line. Frank Hamilton Spearman, the author of "The Girl and the Game," made a study of railroad life which carried him into the innermost secrets of the financial and operating ends of transcontinental lines.

"James P. McGowan, the director, is a practical railroad man, and his screened pictures have won for him the unanimous praise of railroad officials the country over.

"Helen Holmes, the heroine in "The Girl and the Game," is the ideal for the part. She possesses that deep and thorough understanding of picture values and ability to present exceptional dramatic interpretations and the courage to take any sort of personal risk to bring realism to the story, that places her in a niche all her own.

"In order that the director and his company might be accorded every facility for the taking of the unusual and spectacular scenes in "The Girl and the Game," I had erected a depot on the grounds of the Signal studios, practicable in every way, inside and outside, switch towers at various points on the Signal trackage and all the known safeguards as well as hazards of the rail were installed or provided for, including locomotives and rolling stock.

"An idea of the completeness of the Signal studios may be gleaned from this, in the taking of the first chapter of 'The Girl and the Game' Director McGowan, twenty minutes after the author's script had been given to him, had a train consisting of Pullmans, parlor car, diner, baggage car, day coaches and engine ready for the camera.

"Mr. Spearman has deciphered the mysterious web entangling the operations of vast railroad enterprises, drawn it gently aside from off the statuesque shoulders of a pampered daughter of society and hidden with it the piercing eyes of some charmer of another sisterhood, who has put her cunning jewel laden hands into 'the game.'"

LIVE WIRE EXHIBITORS

EDITOR'S NOTE.—It is the desire of "Motion Picture News" to include under this heading novel advertising ideas, successful schemes in the management, decoration and equipment of the theatre—everything, in fact, done by the exhibitor to stimulate his trade. We invite every exhibitor to write us about any new enterprise he has; also to come to us for advice or information along any line. DAYTON EXHIBITORS ADVERTISE FREELY IN 8 PAGE NEWSPAPER SUPPLEMENT

DAYTON, Ohio, comes forward with an unusual display of enterprise in the form of an eight-page motion picture supplement issued Sundays by the Dayton News.

An entire section devoted to nothing but picture news and advertising. Do you get that? And in a city by no means one of the country's largest.

It is said the weekly attendance of Daytonites at picture theatres is 150,000. The Dayton News has recognized the right of the 150,000 to have spread before them news of their favorite amusement.

This supplement, which by the way is called "Motion Picture News," is, according to our notion, ably edited. There is a fair division of space between local publicity and news of the whole field, but Mabel Brown Martin, the editor, emphasizes local news, and properly so.

The general lay out is good; there are several cuts, not a few of which are "stills," and color is used on pages one and eight. Each page has a double strip of "film" as a border.

It is evident also that Dayton exhibitors are giving The News a generous amount of advertising, the Colonial Theatre being the bright particular star in the issue before us. The entire last page is occupied by the Colonial's advertisement of "The Battle Cry of Peace." Other theatres of the town are well represented by display advertising which shows they are alive to this all-important medium of reaching the public eye.

Such manifest co-operation between exhibitor and newspaper is bound to prove of profit to both. It cannot fail to do so, any more than it can fail to be appreciated by the public. The alliance between exhibitor and newspaper is a perfectly sound business proposition in the first place; and if The Dayton News can recognize the value to its columns of a motion picture supplement, why should other newspapers find it difficult to do so?

For The News' enterprise we have nothing but praise. As to certain details of the supplement, we suggest improvement might be effected by getting away from heavy type in the exhibitor ads. We suggest also that some of these ads are too solid.

TWO BIG NEWSPAPERS ESTABLISH M. P. DEPARTMENTS

The Kansas City Star and the Cincinnati Times-Star are the latest converts to motion pictures.

The former is not at present devoting an entire page to the subject, but its recognition of the value of motion picture news is a tribute to the growing power of the photoplay, as the Star is one of the most conservative as well as one of the best edited newspapers in this country.

The Cincinnati Times-Star runs its photoplay department on Tuesdays. It contains film news of general interest to the public. Motion picture departments are now established in all the Cincinnati papers. The Commercial-Tribune recently inaugurated a department in its Sunday issue, the Enquirer has printed screen news for a year or more, and the Post publishes a picture department every day.

CROWDS JAM BOSTON HOUSE TO SEE CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG

Manager Brennan, of the St. James theatre, Boston, made a ten strike when he introduced Clara Kimball Young in person to an audience which jammed the theatre. This was the first time a film star had appeared in person in a Boston theatre where pictures of her are shown.

Miss Young discussed acting for the pictures, related some of her own experience, and advised young girls with ambitions to go into motion picture work not to go into the thing pell-mell, but only after careful deliberation and with studious consideration of all the elements involved in such a decision.

LIVE WIRE SHELTON GETS 25 ADMISSION FOR FOX PICTURE

Roy Shelton, manager of the Strand theatre, Nashville, Tenn., and organizer of the company which own it, with eight months' experience in the theatrical business, has obtained twenty-five cents admission for a program picture, opening with "The Two Orphans," a William Fox picture. The Strand hereafter will charge twenty-five cents admission on all Fox productions.

ILLUSTRATIONS FOR THE HOUSE ORGAN

Last week we pointed out to exhibitors the necessity for running in the house organ a ready reference guide to the week's pictures.

Of equal importance to those issuing a house organ of any pretentiousness is the question of effective illustration. Most exhibitor publications reveal a lack of attention to illustrations.

To be really worth anything as advertising cuts must be clear, and must appeal to the reader.

You cannot get good results from cuts if you use cheap stock and poor ink. Especially is this true of electros. If your advertising appropriation is not large enough to permit the printing of your house organ on stock that will give cuts their full value, it is waste of money and energy to use cuts at all. In that case, it is better to dispense with them entirely, and devote the space they would consume to better display of reading matter.

EXHIBITORS: STUDY THE VALUE OF WHITE SPACE

One of the cardinal points in good advertising is the proper use of white space.

Few exhibitors, as yet, have learned its value. Their house organs, their newspaper advertisements are overburdened with type.

A type-crowded ad. wearies the eye. It reduces all your statements about a picture to a dead level, and forces you to resort to screaming type in order to drive home any point at all.

Study the art of condensation. When you run a synopsis, boil it down to a few words—a short, vivid, accurate description of what the plot actually contains. Omit all high sounding adjectives. Don't promise the picture goer anything the picture doesn't contain.

And remember this: effective advertising is known for what it does not say as well as for what it does.

The Small Cuts Are Not Effective, and Destroy the Symmetry of the Pages. Better Leave Them Out Altogether, or Use Larger Ones. The House Organ as a Whole Shows Enterprise. Typographical Improvements Will Double Its Appeal to the Reader

Neither can you get good results from cuts unless the cuts mean something to the reader. Simply running the picture of a star, without an attractive border, or something to make it distinctive, is second rate advertising. If the player is photographed in a striking costume, or in an appealing pose, well and good. It is good advertising to use such an illustration, provided you have room enough to give it the proper depth.

But much more effective is an illustration showing an actual scene from the picture. This gives the reader a foretaste of the photoplay; it shows the characters in action, and is a far better curiosity-arouser than a personal photograph.

Lucy Norton	Myrtle Stedman	Mrs. Oldsmith	Lydia Yeamans Titus
Charles Shackelton	Forrest Stanley	Henry Jardine	Syd de Grey

CHARLES SHACKELTON offers "Jane" $500 to pose as his wife during his uncle's approaching visit. The housemaid, who with William, her butler-husband, is planning on a chicken farm, accepts the offer much to the relief of the gay young bachelor who has told his relative he was married in order to secure an increased allowance. "Jane" finds it hard to lay aside her feather-duster instincts, but gets along very well until the inquisitive old uncle benevolently inquires for "the baby." To quiet any suspicion the conspirators fill the vacancy, but unfortunately requesition the infant of a reluctant washerwoman who does not speak good English, and in the midst of the uncle's ecstacies over the "heir to the house" the illiterate mother bursts in and demands the immediate return of her child. Repulsed, she summons the police who, finding the baby in the uncle's arms, nab him as the kidnapper.

Desperate at this new contingency young Shakelton throws himself at the feet of his true love, Lucy Norton, whose father has ruled against him because of his wildness, and she is about to brave parental wrath and become his wife when she discovers the baby and the supposed alliance with "Jane."

Reduced to the last resort, Shackelton finally has to tell the truth and this proves the best strategy of all.

THE MAJESTIC MONTHLY, COLUMBUS, OHIO, EMPLOYS EFFECTIVE ILLUSTRATIONS

THE WEEK'S BEST LIVE WIRE STUNT

To C. C. McKibbin, Manager of the Syracuse Branch of the Fox Film Corporation, belongs the credit of the best Live Wire Stunt of the week.

Mr. McKibbin has been urging three three-day run of Fox features at the Eckel Theatre at Syracuse, and in this instance as well as in the case of any other exhibitor gave his best efforts to prove the contention correct.

All of the big Department Stores have been adverse to using their show windows in any way to cooperate with the picture theatre, and to McKibbin goes the leather medal for persuading D. M. Edwards of the big Edwards Department Store that Valeska Suratt in "The Soul of Broadway" could bring gold dollars into the Edwards cash drawer.

A window display resulted, attracted the attention of feminine hearts, and at the same time handed them the silent message that Miss Suratt would appear at the Eckel Theatre Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday wearing these same beautiful gowns and hats.

The Edwards store unhesitatingly states that they did a big business in their cloak, suit and hat department as the direct result of advertising the fact that the store was showing the exact duplicates of all gowns worn by Miss Suratt.

The exhibitor benefitted in gate receipts and Mr. McKibbin has opened the way for the Syracuse exhibitors to follow with other stunts of a similar beneficial nature.

AMONG THE EXCHANGES

CAMPBELL, IN CHARGE OF NEW ENGLAND FOR FOX, PUT IN CHARGE OF CANADA

HARRY CAMPBELL is one of the busiest men in town these days. He has made such a good record as manager of the New England Fox Film Exchange on Piedmont street that they have just made him district manager of the Fox business in the Dominion of Canada as well.

As leader of the Fox invasion into the Dominion he will spend half of his time north of the border, and the rest looking after New England business from his Boston office. Mr. Campbell was first promoted to his new position, and then taken down with illness, but he is up and about again now, preparing to take a two weeks' trip to Canada.

Mr. Campbell's outlook for the Canadian business is most enthusiastic. "Conditions in the Dominion," he told the NEWS man, "are most favorable for pictures at least. Of course the ordinary lines of business are handicapped by the war, but the film houses are getting their full share of patronage."

The film is a form of amusement which is cheap enough to appeal to the masses, and those masses are crowding into the cinema houses.

"As for censorship conditions in the Dominion, I find them much the same as in New England. There are separate boards of censors in Quebec and Ontario provinces, and I suppose the usual trouble is encountered there in connection with their work.

"But the standards of censorship are much the same as those in the States. Thus far I have found the boards very fair in their judgments.

"Canadian exhibitors are welcoming Fox features with open arms. We did a tremendous business up there before these exhibitors had even seen our films. So far we have opened up two exchanges, in Montreal and Quebec. In about two months we will open another in New Brunswick, and later one in western Canada, probably in Winnipeg."

The manager of the Montreal office is Mitchell Grandby, promoted from roadman. Chandos Brenon, a brother of Herbert Brenon, the Fox director who is making the Kellerman film in Jamaica, is manager of the Quebec office. When Mr. Campbell is in Canada Charles H. Phillips is in charge of the Boston office.

That office has just passed through its record week. It is selling fourteen weeks ahead on the Fox contracts. The road force has recently been doubled, the new men being Ben Rogers, in charge of New Hampshire and Vermont, and William Shapiro, in Maine.

EXCHANGES IN KANSAS CITY TERRITORY REPORT MANY CHANGES AMONG EXECUTIVES

E. H. MITCHELL, who has been in charge of "The Girl and Game" department of the Mutual Film Corporation in Kansas City for several months, has resigned and will return to his former position of assistant manager of the Universal exchange in Omaha.

The former Kriterion manager in Kansas City, E. A. Liles, has opened the Co-Operative Film Service in the Gloyd building in Kansas City, and will handle Keystone and Chaplin comedies at popular prices.

M. E. Williams has resigned as manager of the Metro exchange in Kansas City and will go to Dallas, Texas, where he will open an exchange of his own. He will handle in the southern city, Campbell's Cartoons. Williams is taking with him J. A. Jones, who has been on the road for Metro ever since Williams became manager.

P. J. Hall has opened in the Gloyd building in Kansas City, the Western Film Exchange, and is handling features and Chaplin comedies. Hall has a number of good features, among which are, "The Littlest Rebel," "The Blue Mouse," "The Arctic Hunt," and a number of Pickford subjects.

Henry Berman is the new Metro manager in Kansas City. He succeeds M. E. Williams. Berman brings with him from the east, Harry Skirboll, who will be the roadman that travels out of that city with the Metro Features.

A. A. Chatkin, the new United Film Service manager in Kansas City, is doing an exceptionally good business.

Two Mutual special representatives have been in Kansas City for a few days going over things in general with Manager F. L. Kiltz. They were J. L. Rothford and Charles Paulson.

They both went away satisfied with the business that is being done by the Mutual in that territory. According to Manager Kiltz, they are doing as good a business as any of the sixty-eight offices that are conducted by the Mutual.

LEVINE GOES FROM VANCOUVER TO CALGARY FOR UNIVERSAL

Jules Levine, booker at the Universal exchange in Vancouver, will leave for Calgary next week, to take a similar position in the Universal office there.

SHURTLEFF LEAVES ATLANTA FOR V-L-S-E OFFICE IN DETROIT

Announcement is made that C. E. Shurtleff, formerly of the Atlanta office of the Big Four, has been transferred to Detroit, to take charge of the sub-branch office in that city, which is under the supervision of Sydney E. Abel, manager of the Cleveland office. Mr. Shurtleff has made a very enviable record by his work in the South, being consistently toward the top of the list in the efficiency tables, grading the work of the sales force of the V-L-S-E as a whole.

Another addition to the Big Four's constantly increasing sales organization is that of Allan J. Bachrach, who will be attached to the Washington sub-branch office, and will work in North Carolina and Virginia. Mr. Bachrach was a former exhibitor, who made quite a name for himself by reason of his advanced methods while manger of the Washington house of the Brylawski chain of theatres.

Mr. Bachrach entered the sales field of the industry when he became affiliated with the World Film office in Washington, under Leon J. Bamberger, who was then its manager. Mr. Bamberger is now sales promotion manager of the V-L-S-E, so that Mr. Bachrach will again come under the notice of the man who first introduced him to the marketing side of moving pictures.

REDFIELD JOINS BELL FEATURE COMPANY

Frank W. Redfield, late manager of the Fox Film Corporation, Chicago office, is now connected with the W. H. Bell Feature Film Corporation in a similar capacity.

Mr. Redfield has been exclusively engaged in the motion picture distribution end of the business continuously for the past fifteen years and over, starting with George K. Spoor, later with the General Film Company and recently with the Fox Film Corporation.

The acquisition of Mr. Redfield's services by the Bell corporation gives the exhibitors in that territory personal attention distributing service and more than ordinary efficiency.

LEONHARDT MAKES TRIP TO SAN DIEGO, CAL.

Harry Leonhardt, special western representative of the Fox Film Corporation of New York, is on a visit to the San Diego, Cal., houses which use the Fox service of feature pictures.

On his auto trip there he was accompanied by Mrs. Leonhardt and Mrs. Lee and R. W. Barran, traveling exchange man for the Fox office in Los Angeles.

FOX FIRST RUNS AT NEW GRAND CENTRAL, ST. LOUIS

The Fox Film exchange, under the direction of Manager Baker, has closed a contract with William Sievers, who manages the New Grand Central, at Grand and Lucas avenues, and the Central, at Sixth and Market streets, whereby all the Fox features will be shown for the first run at the New Grand Central and the week afterward at the Central, down town, after which they are not to be shown in St. Louis again for the period of a year.

The V-L-S-E exchange, at 3630 Olive street, St. Louis, is being remodeled and enlarged by pulling down an old partition used when the Alco Exchange occupied the office, and putting in a new one that will give more room in the front part of the office, as well as give a private office to the manager, S. W. Hatch.

Floyd Lewis, manager of the Triangle exchange at 3320 Lindell Boulevard, St. Louis, has a new assistant in the person of Ferris Frees, with whom Mr. Lewis was associated in Oklahoma. Mr. Frees is an experienced film man, having been with the Mutual Film Corporation at Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

The Triangle people say that busienss is flourishing in the St. Louis territory, and many out-of-town bookings have been made in the last few days, among them, Centralia, Belleville, Alton and Olney, Ill., and Kirksville, Mo., and Paducah, Ky.

METRO'S EXCHANGE OPENINGS IN FOUR WESTERN CITIES

The Metro Los Angeles office has now been opened at 738 South Olive street. This will be in charge of E. J. Lipson, and completes the releasing organization of the Metro on the West Coast. The several new offices have been opened by Harry J. Cohen.

At Seattle the office is at 1214-½ Third avenue; 72 Broadway at Portland, and 311 South Main street at Butte, Montana. These three exchanges were taken over from the firm of Bailey and Grombacker.

At San Francisco the Metro office is at 49 Jones street. The Metro program was formerly handled at San Francisco and Los Angeles by the All Star Feature Distributers.

The Los Angeles William Fox offices force are decidedly enthusiastic over the Fox productions, and have taken it upon themselves to let the world know about it through the newspapers.

They have been getting over a number of stories in the local newspapers, and special feature articles descriptive of the million dollar motion picture production now being made at Kingston, Jamaica. This work is being carried on by Harry Leonhardt, general western representative, and S. N. Robinson, manager of the Los Angeles office.

OSBORN TOURS MARYLAND AND THE VIRGINIAS FOR PATHE

H. M. Osborn, Washington, D. C., manager of the Pathé Film Exchange, is on the road through Maryland and the Virginias and will be away from Washington the greater part of December and January. It is Mr. Osborn's intention to study the exhibitors' desires and demands from all viewpoints and not merely to discover what Pathé is doing and add exhibitors to his list. During his absence S. M. Flax will be at the helm of affairs for the local offices.

Under the presidency of Frank Spurrier, manager of the Washington, D. C., V-L-S-E exchange, the National Exchangemen's League is holding weekly meetings and discussing matters of mutual concern. "One of the conditions we hope to straighten out is the useless competition of admission among exhibitors," said Mr. Spurrier.

"It is not our province to tell the exhibitor what price of admission he shall ask nor in fact the number of reels he shall show, but we can often arrest unreasonable competition and assist in maintaining a more uniform admission which will result in benefit to the exhibitor and raise the standard of the performance."

FOX LEASES 4 FLOORS IN CINCINNATI

Four floors of the Oriel building, 412 Vine street, Cincinnati, have been leased for the Cincinnati offices of the Fox Film Corporation. The location is considered very much more advantageous than the one on East Fourth street where Manager A. M. Muller has held forth during the past year. The business of the Fox office in Cincinnati has increased to such an extent that Muller was cramped for room in the one floor he occupied formerly. The executive offices of the branch are now located on the second floor of the Oriel building with the paper, literature, repair and shipping departments on the upper floors.

A deal for a franchise in Indianapolis on all Triangle productions was closed recently by E. G. Sourbier, one of the most prominent exhibitors of that city, when he called on Manager C. C. Hite of the Triangle Film Corporation in Cincinnati. Other contracts recently closed by Mr. Hite are with Louis Chakeres, Majestic, Springfield; and exhibitors in Elwood, Anderson and Richmond, Ind., and Middletown, O.

REGINA EXCHANGE DISTRICT FINDS BUSINESS LULL

Mr. Downey, manager of the Canadian Universal Film Company in Regina, reports that there has been an unprecented spell of house closing in his district. No less than seven houses shutting down completely and an equal number running only two or three nights a week.

Yet, most of these houses expect better business a little later and state that they will undoubtedly reopen.

LESTER S. TOBIAS IN CHARGE OF NEW HAVEN MUTUAL

Within the past week, New Haven, Conn., became the home of another film exchange, when the Mutual entered the field. Lester S. Tobias, brother of Maurice F. Tobias, has been placed in charge of the new office, and judging by the manner in which he has taken hold of his work, is bound to make a success of his undertaking.

LIPSON WILL REORGANIZE COAST SERVICE FOR METRO

E. J. Lipson has arrived in Los Angeles as representative of the Metro Pictures Corporation, and within the next few days will open an office on Olive street in film row.

The Metro Corporation is reorganizing the Coast releasing service with the intention of having its own exchanges in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle, Portland and Butte.

Mr. Seldron, formerly of Minneapolis, has been placed in charge of the San Francisco recently opened exchange, and Mr. Kerr is manager of the Seattle branch. Metro pictures were formerly handled by the All Star Feature Distributors in Los Angeles and San Francisco.

R. E. Baron, salesman for the Los Angeles Fox office made a trip to Calexico, California, this week, to stop the sub-renting films to dancehall owners across the Mexican line. This trip was taken by Mr. Baron after the Los Angeles Fox office had received definite information that E. H. Emmert, who conducts a theatre at Calexico, had been sub-renting films in Mexicali.

GUSTAVE FROHMAN ERECTS NEW EXCHANGE BUILDING IN BOSTON

Boston's motion picture district is to have a new exchange building. The Gustave Frohman exchange is erecting a two-story structure at 20 Winchester street. The exchange is planned to be a clearing house for educational films.

Mr. Frohman has been convinced by experience that there is a large number of worthy films which are put into the storehouse prematurely because the market for them is not general. It is this sort of film which he and his new exchange will foster. He aims to make the exchange a place to which anybody looking for an educational feature may turn and not be disappointed.

Mr. Frohman is president of the company, Edward A. Meysenberg vice-president, and David Baer treasurer. The company has acquired land in the rear of the new exchange, and next year will erect a studio for the manufacture of films.

A large number of scenarios have been secured.

TWENTY-FOUR SHEET STANDS FREE FOR "GRAFT" RENTERS IN CANADA

The Canadian Universal Company in Toronto is making big preparations for the starting of their new serial "Graft." The management states that about five or six hundred dollars would be spent in advertising the film throughout Ontario.

A poster campaign in conjunction with the theatres has been organized in which twenty-four sheet stands are given free to the exhibitors upon their promise to post them up in their locality.

FINCH MAKES CHANGES IN "U" OFFICE AT VANCOUVER

James E. Finch, manager of the Universal Film Company in Vancouver, has made a change in the business quarters of his company in that city. His new offices are very complete.

PHILADELPHIA EXCHANGES BECOME CENTRES OF WINTER ACTIVITY

GEORGE BEIHOFF, manager of the World office in Philadelphia, is receiving congratulations from film friends on the recent arrival of a nine-pound youngster, gender, male, completing a pair. The stork has orders if it comes again to reverse its sex list.

The office is having much success with a clever device known as a "sales reel," quite a new idea in the marketing of films.

This reel contains animated pictures of prominent World and Equitable stars as well as the best scenes from recent releases of these companies.

Given an indifferent exhibitor and a determined salesman, the latter has only to get permission for a fifteen minute use of the screen, throw on the sample reel and the booking deed is done.

Although only in use a short time, increased bookings are coming in and many letters being received asking to see the sales reel.

The Fox Film office in Philadelphia, has started a new style in filmland, being the first exchange on the street to put in a storm vestibule.

This protection from drafts is much appreciated by the several young ladies whose work keeps them near the oft opened front door.

V. C. Carrick, manager of the Universal office in Philadelphia, says a whole company headed by Ben Wilson and Dorothy Phillips with Lucius Henderson directing, having obtained permission to use the Liberty Bell in one of their scenes, journeyed to Philadelphia and had the Bell moved out in Independence Square to be filmed. Their arrival being timed to take in the exhibitor's ball on December 8, the company made it a point to include that fastivity in its itinerary.

The Mutual Film Company expects to be established in its new Philadelphia quarters by December 15. Coincident with this move will be the passing of the name "Continental Feature Company" in connection with the Mutual.

There are at present only three offices under this brand in the whole country, and all will be abolished, the future Mutual features being known by their title of Mutual Masterpieces.

C. G. Powell will remain Philadelphia manager of all Mutual interests under the consolidation, while J. W. Pope, now Continental Feature Manager, will be representative for Mutual Masterpieces.

"Inspiration" and the "Miracle of Life" are both so popular just now, many exhibitors are disappointed at having to wait weeks to obtain these films.

The New Film Corporation which recently opened Philadelphia offices at 1335 Vine street, is already booming its business in the Quaker City section and beating its fellow offices in other sections by getting its program in about two hundred theatres in Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey, Delaware and Maryland, in the short space of three weeks.

Robert Lynch, manager of the exchange, has as temporary assistant, Philip S. Greenberg.

The city business is being handled by Simon Pelsweig, well known and liked in the trade by his former connection with the United Booking Office.

W. J. Madison is the out of town representative, while Sadie Rubin is in charge of the office.

Oscar Morgan, publicity manager of the Famous Players Exchange is having bouquets galore thrown at him these days.

The reason? Why the new "Paramount Pointers" being gotten out by the exchange, of which friend Oscar is the editor. Hence the bouquets.

A clever house organ suited to local needs helping exhibitors and incidentally Paramount pictures, which will doubtless bring yet more business to this already over busy exchange.

"The Cheat," with Fanny Ward, a Lasky release, was given a private screening at the exchange for the newspaper men a few days ago, and received much commendation.

"Hypocrites" has taken a recent spurt and so great is the demand, the present films are all worn out, necessitating the ordering of new prints.

The Metro office reports business so good an increased force has become necessary. Bookings are getting more numerous right along.

The latest reports "from the front" show one hundred contracts in Philadelphia and its environs.

Norman Forte is a newcomer amongst Metro workers.

Electric lights all went out in Film Row the other night.

Such a little catastrophe stop those energetic workers? Not much! Every manager had his office boys hustling; every grocery store in the neighborhood was raided and in a few minutes all were busy by the primitive lights of tallow dips.

It was the wee' sma' hours before the electrics again shone forth, but some were still bending over their desks. It was a contrast to make one philosophize.

The most modern of industries forced at a pinch to resort to the meagre light of the days when a "movie" would have been considered a device of the devil and its promoters promptly burned at the stake by the authorities.

TRIANGLE MAKES REGULAR RELEASES IN FRISCO

The Triangle exchange in the Film Exchange Building on Golden Gate avenue, San Francisco, is now making regular releases. The service has been placed in a number of representative houses in that territory by C. Mell Simmons, manager of that branch. Several first run houses in that city have contracts under consideration.

President H. E. Aitken, who made a short visit to San Francisco recently, has departed for New York and will stop at Denver for a few days to look over the situation there. While in Los Angeles he viewed some of the latest productions and predicted that these will prove a surprise, even to those expecting the greatest things from the Triangle.

MOTION PICTURE FREEDOM LEAGUE ORGANIZED IN LOS ANGELES

The Motion Picture Freedom League is the name given an organization recently perfected in Los Angeles by a committee selected by the exchangemen and producers at a previous meeting, the purpose of which is to conduct a campaign looking to the elimination of censorship in Los Angeles and southern California.

J. A. Quinn, manager of the Superba theatre, was named president; Dr. Sam Atkinson, secretary; C. J. Marley, manager of the Los Angeles Film Exchangemen's Board of Trade, treasurer; Thomas Dixon, G. M. Hutchinson, and Jesse L. Lasky, vice-presidents.

The officers were empowered to appeal to the film industry for funds for propaganda purposes, and A. W. Strong, a Los Angeles attorney, was employed as representative.

The organization is very active arranging for the presentation of their petition to the city mayor and council, asking that a film commissioner be appointed as substitute for the present censor board, the duties of such a commissioner being to see that only films approved by the National Board of Censorship are shown.

BIG FOUR "CLANSMAN" FULL OF GOOD IDEAS

The Big 4 Clansman, issued by the V-L-S-E exchanges in Kansas City and St. Louis, in the interests of exhibitors in Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Illinois, Iowa, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Tennessee, and Kentucky, is a live sixteen-page publication.

Its make-up is good, and it is printed on a very fair stock. There are enough cuts to give variety.

What we like especially about the Clansman, besides the conversational style in which it is written, is its insistence upon the value of newspaper advertising, and its advocacy of motion picture departments in newspapers.

It offers direct help to exhibitors in their campaign to win the papers. This activity on the part of an exchange is eminently praiseworthy, and we take pleasure in praising it every time we hear about it.

The Clansman is doing good work in many other exchange activities, furnishing a needed link of personal touch between manufacturer and exhibitor.

HARDENBROOK INSTALS PROJECTION ROOM IN MUTUAL NEW ORLEANS BRANCH

In a week or two New Orleans is to have the first "miniature theatre" in a film exchange. Manager Ross Hardenbrook, of the Mutual Film Corporation, is rushing his new projection booth to completion. The Pathé Exchange also is building a projection booth.

Ernst Boehringer, a prominent exhibitor of New Orleans, and owner of the Columbia Theatre in Canal Street, who has entered the exchange end of the business, recently was appointed Southern representative of the New York Staats-Zeitung official war film department. Mr. Boehringer has opened headquarters at 528 Audubon building, New Orleans. He also is handling a series of Chaplin films.

Film News From Foreign Parts

OPENING OF GREAT VAUDEVILLE THEATRE AS KINEMA, EVENT OF SEASON IN PARIS

Special to Motion Picture News

Paris, Dec. 1

"BUSINESS again as usual," is what I was told at Pathé's where I went the other day to find out how far the sixteen months of the war have affected the business of this great firm.

"Nearly all our employes joined the army at the very beginning of the war; our establishment has been occupied by the military authorities, and as you see, a large portion is still occupied by them. We have had to get women to do the work our men used to do, and of course it has taken them a long time to learn it. Now we are all right and in working order again. Our production is nearly the same it was previous to the war. Four of our cameramen are at the front filming the actualities. The negatives, as you know, are kept by the authorities. We have permission to print a certain number of copies for France and foreign countries."

This firm is releasing next Monday a film called "Les Mystères de New York." No film has even been advertised like this one is. Pierre Decourcelle, one of our best known novelists, is publishing the story in the Matin and every week the public will be able to see at the kinemas all they read during the week. More than two hundred kinemas have already booked this film as a first run. It is to be seen in series of 14 weeks.

In one of my previous letters I reported that Mr. Navarre, a very important artist of Gaumont's, had left this firm. Now Madame René Carl, a principal artiste who has been with this firm for more than ten years, and who played all important parts in their principal films, has left also. She is going in for producing on her own. A first film called "Quand Même" was shown last week and made a big hit.

It is very gratifying to notice that all kinemas in Paris are doing a tremendous business. They are actually crowded day and night. On the boulevards hundreds of people are seen waiting for hours, anxious to get inside.

In spite of the war, new ones are being built. We are to have two new ones opening next week, one belonging to a company managed by Mr. Sandberg, and the other one belonging to our "Kinema-Veteran," Gabriel Keuser, who opened the Gab-Ka, the very first kinema on the Parisian boulevards.

The most important event of the season is undoubtedly the opening next Friday of the great vaudeville theatre on the Boulevard des Italiens, as a kinema. The special film to be shown for the first time in Paris is "Cabiria." I may as well mention that this film was to be shown just before the war by Mr. Isman, an American manager who came over to Paris with this purpose two years ago. He then leased the Théâtre des Champs Elysées, built for an opera house by Mr. Astruc and closed soon after. Mr. Isman had everything ready and was to open it with "Cabiria" in October, 1914, when war was declared. He then left Paris; this theatre never opened, and now "Cabiria" will be seen for the first time at the Vaudeville, undoubtedly the nicest frame for this film.

I was told a rather amusing story by Mr. Dumeny, our great actor, who plays the principal part of a French General in a film called "L'Empreinte de la Patrie," released not long ago by Mademoiselle Halley. In this film Mr. Dumeny is seen working into the palace of the minister of war, and as he passes, the soldiers are presenting arms. Requested to tell if he had a special permission to dress as a general and to visit the minister, he laughed and answered: "Qui ne risque rien, ne gagne rien" ("Nothing risked, nothing gained").

Mr. Monat, one of our most important film dealers, has shown lately a few very special films. One of them called "La Douleur," a special scenario, has created quite a sensation. The other one, called "Kouria le Bossu," is also a scenario out of the ordinary. An Italian film, in which a great bayonet attack by the celebrated Bersaglieri is seen, has also made a big success.

The first film edited by the Tiber Film, with Madame Lina Cavalieri, entitled "La Sposa del Morto," was shown last week at the National Theatre in Rome and made a big impression on the crowded photoplay theatre.

FEATURES CONTINUE POPULAR IN AUSTRALIAN CITIES; MARY PICKFORD WINS NEW LAURELS IN "FANCHON"

Special to Motion Picture News

Sydney, N. S. W., Australia, Nov. 25.

FEATURES continue to draw large crowds at the high-class theatres in this "village." Those shown during the current week include "Mons. Lecoq" (Mutual Masterpicture), "Fanchon the Cricket" (Famous Players) and "The Pit" with Wilton Lackaye (World.)

Mary Pickford's performance in "Fanchon" was well applauded, and will greatly add to her reputation as an actress in this country.

There is one item as regards the Paramount pictures that are shown here, that should be rectified. The features come through England and are without exception mutilated in that country (presumably by the agents) and cut down, so that in some cases it is impossible to follow the story. "The Marked Woman," a World feature shown last week, had been treated in the same way. On viewing it, originally a five-reeler, I was somewhat surprised to only have to sit through about 3,500 feet. The story was unintelligible to even the most frequent of picturegoers. I venture to prophesy that if this cutting continues, these two brands of films will not be much of a "box office" success to the exhibitors.

"The Eagle's Nest," the first of the V-L-S-E shown here, proved a great success. It was a great picture from beginning to end, and Romanie Fielding deserves credit for his capable direction, not forgetting the fine work of Edward Arden, in the lead.

"Hypocrites" will be presented at the "Palace," a "legitimate" theatre on November 13. According to the reports of exhibitors who have viewed the trade screening, this film should be a second "Spoilers" from a monetary point of view.

J. C. Williamsons are working on a feature entitled "For Australia," featuring Charles Villiers, an actor formerly of the legitimate stage, who has been appearing in photoplays for some time now. His last success was as the villain in "The Loyal Rebel."

A great recruiting march was started recently—from Gilgandra to Sydney—over 350 miles. Australasian Films have secured several films showing their progress on the march.

RUCKER TO TAKE PICTURES OF FORD PILGRIMS FOR "ANIMATED"

The "Universal Animated Weekly" has sent over Cameraman Joseph T. Rucker to photograph the Ford Peace Pilgrims on their trip across the ocean to pacify the warring nations.

Cameraman Rucker has been with the Universal for the past three years, having come to New York office after a few years in the South, where he covered for a time all the principal events for the "Animated."

His ability to get the important events over when it was news and his alertness in planting his camera on a scene ahead of anyone else prompted Jack Cohn, editor of the "Universal Animated Weekly," to promote Mr. Rucker to the New York office.

SERRANO LEAVES STAGE FOR ROLE IN "LYDIA GILMORE"

For the difficult role of Dr. Gilmore, in its adaptation of Henry Arthur Jones' great dramatic success, "Lydia Gilmore," in which Pauline Frederick is to be starred, the Famous Players Film Company has secured the distinguished actor, Vincent Serrano. Mr. Serrano is one of the few remaining stage notables who has never before appeared on the screen.

Though new to filmdom, the name of Vincent Serrano is well known in the theatrical world. Among his many achievements is the unique record of having played Lieut. Burton in "Arizona," for over one thousand times. He was co-star in "A Little Brother of the Rich" and "On Parole," and was featured in "The Lure" and "The Revolt."

Mr. Serrano is a native of New York and owes his striking name to the fact that he is half Irish and half Spanish. He has been on the stage for fifteen years, the last five of which have found him in the enviable position of never having to leave Broadway for an engagement.

"LIFE OF OUR SAVIOUR," PATHE, FOR CHRISTMAS WEEK

Pathé will release on the Gold Rooster program for Christmas week the seven-part "Life of Our Saviour," in Pathé color. Of this costly production it may be said that years were spent in its making, and thousands of people employed in the cast. The principal parts were played by the leading celebrities of the Parisian stage, and the historically correct costumes had to be especially made.

The subject lends itself particularly well to color, and the glowing splendor of many of the scenes is said to be almost beyond description. It is difficult in a play of this character to give a thoroughly harmonious and reverent interpretation, but the success with which it has been done in "The Life of Our Saviour" is proven by the universal praise which has been given it by the clergy and educators everywhere.

FIRST "GIRL AND THE GAME" STORY READY DEC. 27

The third installment of the Signal Film Corporation's railroad serial, "The Girl and the Game," the first chapter of which will be released December 27 through the Mutual Film Corporation branches, has been finished.

Smashing engines, derailing cars, plunging the heroine into the dark waters of the river from an open bridge are not enough to satisfy J. P. MacGowan, the director of this picture, nor Frank Spearman, the author, who is already known as a writer of exciting fiction.

In the third chapter of this film novel, which will be composed of fifteen installments, an entire freight train is burned up. Never before, in all her experience in that type of motion pictures, which has given her the name of "the railroad girl," has Helen Holmes been so fearless as she is in "The Girl and the Game," which takes her through a whole series of misfortunes to ultimate success.

Large Interior Castle Set for "U's" "Undine"

Ormston Drew Plans of Structure, an Elaborate Affair, for Erection at the "Back Ranch"—One Living Room and Two Others Are Shown for Panorama Effect

HENRY OTTO AND HIS "UNDINE" COMPANY AT SANTA CRUZ ISLAND

AT the "back ranch" at Universal City, Frank Ormston, technical director of the Big U Company, has under construction one of the largest and most elaborate interior castle sets ever erected for use in the production of a motion picture.

The castle is being constructed from plans designed by Ormston and Director Henry Otto for use in the latter's filmization of the old German fantasy, "Undine." Work on the big set was started nearly three weeks ago, shortly after the company had left the Universal City studios for a trip to the Santa Barbara Islands where they were to make the greater part of the exterior and water scenes in the production.

They remained away nearly three weeks and upon their return, there were still several bits of detail which the construction crew had thus far been unable to complete.

The castle set comprises one main living room with two other rooms adjoining in such a way that a panorama of the principal room takes in the other two and allows important action in General Scenes to be registered in them.

So large is the set that it was found impossible to erect it on the back stage, even though Director General McRae had given orders allowing the Otto company the use of the entire stage space, if necessary. The rains precluded the possibility of using a dirt floor in it with the result that a special platform was constructed some little distance from the stage proper and the set built over and around it.

Five Hundred Theatres Now Take Triangle Service

Foreign Agents Are Making Contracts in South America, Europe and the Far East Besides—Three Hundred and Sixty-Four Houses Sign for a Year

GROWTH of the Triangle Film Corporation service for the last two or three weeks is one of the sensations of the screen world. According to official reports, nearly 500 theatres in the United States alone are now using the service, and foreign agents are busily making contracts in South America, Europe and the Far East.

Among the most gilt edged of these rentals are 364 one year contracts for supplying films to theatres in various parts of the country. Vice-president Adam Kessel issued a statement last week in which he said: "When it is considered that the company was not organized until the middle of July, and made no attempt to secure contracts until the middle of September, we think we have reason to be satisfied with the progress that has been made."

Reports from all over the country indicate that in 90 per cent. of the houses the Triangle program is playing to capacity business. In most of the houses the program of two five part features and two two-reel comedies is split into two parts.

The Griffith supervised feature with one Keystone is used the first half of the week, and the Ince feature and the other Keystone the second half. The shows run from an hour and a half to two hours, according as to whether additional vaudeville features or travel or news features are added or not.

The prices willingly paid by the public are in almost every instance in excess of those charged at the theatre before the Triangle service was started.

NEW YEAR'S BALL PLANNED BY LOS ANGELES EXHIBITORS

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Los Angeles, Dec. 11.

Exhibitors of Los Angeles are planning to give a New Year's ball at the Shrine Auditorium, and in view of this have selected A. P. Tugwell chairman of the committee, and Sam McIntyre, Mike Gore, J. S. Lustig, Jack Root and Fred Miller, all theatre owners, as a committee in charge of arrangements.

Seth Perkins, of the Garrick theatre, is to be director general of the event. The ball given last year by the exhibitors was the most successful of its kind ever given on the West coast, and plans are being made now to even eclipse this former event.

Looking Ahead With the Producers

FARNUM IS HERO IN UNREHEARSED PART WHILE APFEL TAKES SCENES FOR A FOX

IN filming "A Soldier's Oath" for William Fox, Oscar C. Apfel, the producing director, recently led his company of players headed by William Farnum, the star, through action that was as thrilling as that in the manuscript.

The scenes of the story, which are laid in France during war times, required battle fields, convenient forest, an old building, and some hundreds of extras as soldiers. Selecting the environs of Caldwell, New Jersey, as the most available place, Director Apfel detrained his company of players at the station one day during the month just past and drawing them up into miltary formation marched them to the field of operation under the direction of an United United States Army officer especially engaged for the occasion.

Here William Farnum was the first of the players to meet with an accident productive of unlooked for results. Director Apfel had been at his wits' end to find a pair of ancient, rust-eaten handcuffs. Mr. Farnum, fleeing from a band of soldiers, took refuge in an old house. The camera caught him as he bust through the door, but when the director summoned him for another scene, he made no answer.

Investigation showed that he had tumbled down through an old trap door. A rope was quickly procured and when Mr. Farnum emerged from his predicament his arms were filled with relics. Inquiry revealed that he had toppled into a cellar which had been used during revolutionary times by refugees and among the various articles in Mr. Farnum's arms was a pair of handcuffs of an obsolete pattern, completely flaked with rust, that had perhaps been filed from the wrists of an escaped prisoner.

Later, Mr. Apfel was visited by a typical New Jersey constable who said he had heard they were using a 42 centimeter gun and instructing soldiers, among whom were uniformed German and French regulars, in the art of war. He further stated that unless this war activity ceased, he would have to put the whole caboodle of them under arrest. As a matter of fact, the gun, which was a dummy, was an exact duplicate of those used in the present European war and was made by a New York arms company so that it could be fired two or three times without danger. Just as the constable hove in sight, it was fired point blank at an advancing army.

As the superstitiously inclined believe it takes a triangle of happenings to break a hoodoo it developed on Dorothy Bernard to complete the circuit. Miss Bernard when she is forced to travel to locations uses a car, practically transformed into a house on wheels with cooking appliances, a cook tent and supplies carried on top.

On the way back, the chauffeur ran into a soft spot on the edge of a hollow and the machine toppled over. Miss Bernard, who was in the living compartment, did not receive a scratch but the articles on top were distributed promiscuously over a portion of the landscape.

"A Soldier's Oath" was written by Daniel Roosevelt and it is replete with the thrills of war, hate and revenge, tinged with the heart interest born of love. The principal characters include William Farnum, Dorothy Bernard, Kittens Reichart, Alma Frederic, Anna Finlay, Herman J. Herbert, Walter Connolly and others. "A Soldier's Oath" is announced for release Sunday, December 19.

CHAPLIN TO BURLESQUE "CARMEN" FOR ESSANAY

"Carmen," the classic tale of love and passion, so appealing that it has been translated into every language in the world and made into a play and into an opera, and finally into a photoplay by two different companies, is the vehicle that Charlie Chaplin has chosen for his next offering.

"Carmen" is so big that it lends itself readily to burlesque. And Chaplin as the smitten soldier uses Edna Purviance and the situations made by the story to such effect that the play is one continuous laugh. The situations aren't changed. But it is Chaplin, as the "low brow" in the part, that makes it ridiculous. Edna Purviance is Carmen, and Chaplin is Don Jose.

REGINA BADET IN "NO GREATER LOVE" IS EMOTIONAL ACTRESS

Regina Badet, who takes the leading role of Sadunah in the Selig Red Seal play, "No Greater Love," released January 10, through V-L-S-E, is among the best-known emotional actresses of the present day. "No Greater Love" affords Miss Badet every opportunity for wonderful characterization.

REGINA BADET IN "NO GREATER LOVE"

Many will no doubt remember Miss Badet in "Zoe," one of the most successful films released in 1913. The story of "No Greater Love" was written by William Le Queux.

ROLLICKING PART FOR BAGGOTT IN AN IMP

"Bo-Bo, the Seer," is a two-reel comedy-drama with King Baggot playing the part of a physic faker, soon to be released on the Imp-Universal program. In this picture King Baggot is a candy-kiss salesman who loses his job and turns to fortune telling as a means of gaining a livelihood.

He makes a success of it for a while, but then something happens, and a quick get-away is necessary to escape from the clutch of the police.

ISLE FURNISHES DESERT SANDS FOR A PATHE

Edward José who is producing for Pathé the first Kipling book to be filmed, "The Light That Failed," discovered in his search for locations that Fayerweather's Island, off the city of Bridgeport, Conn., offered remarkable opportunities for "real desert stuff."

Furthermore the winter quarters of Barnum and Bailey's circus are in Bridgeport, so a big supply of camels and Arabian horses were right at hand. Therefore Mr. José took his company, headed by Robert Edeson and Jose Collins, up to Connecticut last week, and made a pronounced dent in the ordinarily tranquil life of that enterprising community.

He needed "extras," many of them, and so announced the fact in the local newspapers. Many Bridgeporters could not resist the temptation to work before the camera, so rich and poor, a multitude of them, enrolled with eagerness under his banner, ready to work for "from $2.50 per day up." As Fayerweather's Island is no winter resort, and biting gales were blowing in from the broad Atlantic, the camels must have had their own opinions about the Sahara desert they were supposed to be working in.

AERIAL TORPEDOES IN "MUTUAL WEEKLY"

The series of war pictures which have been appearing in a special section of "The Mutual Weekly," will be augmented in the forthcoming number by a series of views Editor Pell Mitchell has just received from the front.

These include the first pictures of the wonderful aerial torpedoes which, it has been promised, will revolutionize this branch of warfare. The Allies are using them effectively on the western front.

BUSHMAN AND BAYNE BEGIN WORK ON "THE MAN WITHOUT A CONSCIENCE," METRO

FRANCIS X. BUSHMAN and Beverly Bayne, the Metro stars, have begun work on the five-part production, "The Man Without a Conscience," at the Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., studio, 3 West Sixty-first street.

These stars are under contract with the Quality Pictures Corporation, one of Metro's producing companies, and since coming to New York from the Quality-Metro studio in Hollywood, Cal., have been using the Rolfe studios until suitable arrangements can be made for their accommodation elsewhere.

During the absence in the South of the Rolfe and Columbia companies, headed respectively by Marguerite Snow and Mary Miles Minter, however, the Bushman-Bayne company will make the Rolfe studio their own.

Immediately upon the completion of "The Man Without a Conscience," these two stars will begin work on their next big feature, "The Red Mouse." This five-part feature was written by William Hamilton Osborne, the author of "Neal of the Navy" and other motion picture features.

John W. Noble, one of the oldest Metro directors, in point of service, who has made an enviable record in that capacity, will direct "The Man Without a Conscience" and other Bushman-Bayne feature productions.

Mr. Noble has just completed the sensational five-part feature, "Black Fear," in which an all-star cast appears, including Grace Elliston, Grace Valentine, Edward Brennan, Paul Everton, John Tansey, and other prominent stage and screen artists.

Before going to Metro, Mr. Noble directed the "Mutual Girl" series and other notable picture features. William ("Bill") Bailey, who recently joined the Metro forces, will be Mr. Noble's assistant in the new Bushman-Bayne production.

DAVIS FINISHES FIRST FILM FOR HORSLEY

Ulysses Davis, the director signed recently by David Horsley, has finished staging his first Centaur Feature. It is to be called "The Arab's Vengeance" and was released on the Mutual program, December 16.

The story, written by Theodosia Harris, of Mr. Horsley's scenario staff, is laid in Arabia and has to do with an Arab's thirst of revenge for fancied wrongs inflicted.

Margaret Gibson heads the cast, assisted by Roy Watson, John Oaker, Thomas Morrissey, David Allan, B. Singh and others. A contingent of the Bostock animals also appear.

HEIRLOOM FOR LYDIA YEAMANS TITUS, MOROSCO

Lydia Yeamans Titus, who essays the role of the wife of a provincial justice, a part carried by the venerable actor Herbert Standing in the first Anna Held production, now under way at the Oliver Morosco studio in Los Angeles, for the Paramount program, wears a choice bit of real old Irish lace in the production.

She prizes it highly, not because of its intrinsic value so much as because it was given her by her mother, Annie Yeamans, famous some years ago as an Irish character woman.

LINCOLN TO PRODUCE "REVENGE" FOR LUBIN

With the completion of the five-reel feature for V-L-S-E, release early in January, "The Wonderful Wager," the Ford Flivver comedy in which Raymond Hitchcock, Marion Sunshine and Jack Henderson appear in the leading roles, Rene Plaisetty, of the Lubin staff of directors, has begun work on his second production under the Lubin banner.

The story is by Daniel Carson Goodman and was written especially as a co-starring vehicle for June Daye, the popular Lubin star, and E. K. Lincoln, the former Vitagraph star and head of the Lincoln players, who has just joined the Lubin company and makes his first appearance as a Lubin player in this four-reel feature, "Revenge."

A little more than one year and a half ago, Mr. Lincoln severed his connection with the Vitagraph company to begin producing pictures with his own company, the Photo-Play Productions Company. His first release with that corporation was "The Littlest Rebel," in which he starred and which was produced under the direction of Edgar Lewis, who is also now of the Lubin forces.

MANSFIELD'S "PARISIAN ROMANCE" FOR FOX RELEASE

The name and fame of Richard Mansfield will be strikingly brought back into the public mind within the next two weeks when William Fox will release Mansfield's "A Parisian Romance," done into motion pictures and featuring Cooper Cliffe, the dramatic actor, and Dorothy Green, one of the established Fox feature favorites.

This is the first time in the history of motion pictures that the name of Mansfield has been intimately and directly associated with any production and his own personal version of "A Parisian Romance" was obtained after much persuasion by Mr. Fox himself from Mr. Mansfield's family.

FOX PICTURE WITH ATMOSPHERE OF MODERN FRANCE

Dorothy Green and H. Cooper Cliffe are the principals in a new William Fox feature being produced by Frederick Thomson. It is a story of romance that breathes the atmosphere of modern France.

"FORBIDDEN FRUIT" IS LATEST IVAN PRODUCTION

"Concealed Truth," Ivan Film Corporation, offered on a state's right basis, was sold two weeks after the announcement of its release appeared, and "Forbidden Fruit," the latest production from the company, is expected to make an equally popular appeal among buyers handling the other picture.

In the cast of "Forbidden Fruit" are: Paula Shay, playing the lead; Everett Butterfield, who stars in "The Unborn," now running on Broadway, and Minna Phillips, who has played in many stock companies.

MANY INCIDENTS IN LIFE OF DIVA FOR FARRAR PICTURE, JANUARY 6

GERALDINE FARRAR will be seen in another Lasky Feature play company production on the Paramount program. The photoplay is a six-part feature, produced by Cecil B. DeMille, and entitled "Temptation." It will be shown in Paramount theatres on January 6.

Coincident with an announcement of the release of another Farrar feature the Lasky company makes known the release dates of two other photoplays in January through the Paramount Pictures Corporation. The plays show Blanche Sweet in "The Ragamuffin," a drama of pictures by William C. DeMille, and Cleo Ridgely and Wallace Reid, new stars, in "The Golden Chance," a modern photodrama by Jeanie MacPherson and produced by Mr. DeMille.

"Temptation" is the story of a grand opera prima donna, her trials, troubles and tribulations in the long, hard fight to the top. That many of the incidents which comprise the play have been taken from Miss Farrar's own personal experiences lends no small amount of interest to the production.

Many of the scenes reveal for the first time publicly the manner of life and artistic business behind the scenes of a great opera house. Hector Turnbull, formerly dramatic critic of the New York Tribune, is the author of "Temptation."

Geraldine Farrar appears in the role of Renee Dupree, a young American student of singing, who is able to pursue her studies by reason of a small income she earns by singing in big restaurants. She is in love with a young violinist and composer. One night, Muller, the impresario of the opera company, hears Renee sing, sends for her to come to his table at the restaurant where is is sitting with a young woman who is infatuated with him, and invites her to try for a place in the company.

Filled with the excitement of the opportunity, Renee on the following day successfully passes the trial performance. She is given the role of Madame Butterfly to sing at a performance. Flushed with success after the presentation, Muller invites her to his home, tempts her with a contract at a big salary, but asks in return that she make her home with him. This she refuses to do, and Muller, discovering her love affair with the young composer, expels her from the company.

Thereafter, Renee experiences a series of misfortunes, as no one will employ her because of Muller's opposition to her. Julien, Renee's sweetheart, meanwhile, has had his opera refused by Muller for the same reason. When Julien becomes ill from fever and hunger, Renee resolves to make the sacrifice on his account.

Julien's opera is produced with Renee in the leading role. It is a great success. After the performance Renee goes to Muller's house to see him, but his neglected mistress, who has become jealous of Renee's success and attractiveness, kills Muller. This relieves Renee, who returns to Julien and happiness.

Theodore Roberts is Muller, the impresario. Pedro de Cordoba appears as Julien and the cast includes also Raymond Hatton, Anita King and Elsie Jane Wilson.

SIX WORLD FILM FEATURES TO MAKE BID FOR FAVOR WITH BIG SCENES

ROBERT WARWICK, long a leading man in the legitimate drama, and recently one of the new stars of the motion picture world, will appear soon in a picturization of the novel, "The Ambition of Mark Truitt," for the World Film. One of the spectacular scenes in the picture depicts the hero at work in a big steel mill manufacturing war munitions.

The last hundred feet of "The Rack," the World Film release in which Alice Brady is to star, have been taken and privately projected. It will be shown the first week in January.

The filming of George Beban's new drama of life in pastoral France is complete. The film has been cut and sliced, with the sub-titles all in place. But the title of the picture remains undecided at this writing.

Vivian Martin will be starred in the film version of "Over Night," to be released by the World Film Corporation. The play is a society comedy based on Philip Bartholomae's widely successful farce of the same name. The picture has been completed under the direction of James Young. The supporting cast includes Sam B. Hardy, Herbert Yost, Florence Morrison, William Jefferson, Jessie Lewis and Kitty Baldwin.

"Camille," Dumas' immortal love story, upon which almost every emotional actress in two generations has based her greatest bid for popular favor, will be seen on the films December 27. Clara Kimball Young, the World Film star, plays the role of the Lady of the Camelias, with Paul Capellani as Armand the lover, the part he played with Mme. Bernhardt in Paris. Albert Capellani directed the picturized version, copying the enactment of the main scenes closely from the original Bernhardt production.

Kitty Gordon will soon appear in a lensed version of "As in a Looking Glass," the novel by F. C. Phillips. Frank Crane, of the World Film forces, has begun the production in the Fort Lee, N. J., studios.

"McTeague of San Francisco," the novel with which the late William Norris made his greatest sensation, will be shown in film form early in January by the players and directors of the World Film Corporation. Holbrook Blinn, a truly noted character actor, will be starred. Fania Marinoff will play the leading feminine role.

CORRIGAN GOES SOUTH FOR SCENES IN "THE CHAIN INVISIBLE," EQUITABLE

EMMETT CORRIGAN, until Saturday of last week leading player with Julia Arthur in "The Eternal Magdalene," which is now in a long run at the Forty-Eighth Street Theatre, will leave New York early next week for the everglades of Florida, where the first scene in the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation's production of "The Chain Invisible" will be staged.

Mr. Corrigan left a season's work to fulfill a contract made before he accepted the legitimate position—"The Eternal Magdalene."

Frank J. Powell, the director, who comes to Equitable at the conclusion of his work on "The Fourth Estate," upon which he is now working, will have charge of the production work on "The Chain Invisible" and will stage the entire picture in the exact locale of the original script, as rendered by Richard Le Gallienne, the poet and author.

Mr. Corrigan has already had some picture experience, having made his debut in "Greater Love Hath No Man," for Metro.

In 1895, before Edison took up seriously film matters, Mr. Corrigan purchased a Gaumont projection machine. He installed the machine in his home at Verona Island, near Bucksport, Maine, and with each improvement Corrigan has traded in his old projector for a new one and at present, owns fifty thousand feet of industrial and educational film, which he often runs for his guests.

Mr. Corrigan is a member of several of the operators' unions and is a master hand at projecting.

Frank Powell, who begins his Equitable activities with the production of "The Chain Invisible," is busily engaged assembling the supporting cast.

Mr. Powell will bring with him to the Equitable, his camera man, various constructional workers and will do his interior work at the Equitable's Fifty-second street studio.

"The Chain Invisible," by Le Gallienne, marks an advance in the matter of securing material for the screen. Several months ago, President Arthur H. Spiegel of Equitable, conceived the idea of recruiting the more important authors to screen work.

Le Gallienne, after considerable persuasion, was prevailed upon to supply an original work—and his first, a human story, built along novel and sensational lines, with a new and unconventional idea in romance, as its basis.

"The Chain Invisible," representing the debut of Emmett Corrigan, Frank Powell and Richard Le Gallienne, will be released on the regular Equitable program, through World Film, early in February.

FARNUM AT WORK IN "BEN BLAIR," PALLAS

Dustin Farnum, who has just finished a hunting trip in the Maine woods, has returned to the Pallas Pictures studios in Los Angeles, and is now at work upon his third subject for this concern, an adaptation of the late Will Hillibridge's well-known book, "Ben Blair," under the direction of W. D. Taylor. The subject presents a story of the West.

Winifred Kingston, who has appeared with such marked success in "Captain Courtesy," "The Gentleman from India" and other productions, again plays the chief supporting character to the star. Mr. Farnum has as co-workers such players as Herbert Standing, Lemar Johnstone, Page Peters, Lydia Yeamans Titus and others.

COURT DECIDES AGAINST "COUNTRY STORES" IN ALBERTA

A recent decision given at Calgary by the appellate division of the Supreme Court of Alberta will undoubtedly have a direct effect on the practice of holding "country stores" and other lucky-number schemes in connection with motion picture performances. The Hudson's Bay Company of Edmonton announced a proposed drawing for an automobile, the winner of the machines to be the one holding a ticket bearing a lucky number, to be selected by chance. Numbered tickets were given to purchasers of merchandise.

The government instituted suit under the statutes prohibiting lotteries and all kindred games of chance, and a conviction resulted. An appeal was taken by the company, and judgment was reserved. The chief justice of the appellate division has now handed down a unanimous decision, dismissing the appeal of the company from the judgment of Hon. Mr. Justice Simmons. The Hudson's Bay Company has consequently changed the nature of the contest, and the automobile will be awarded to the persona guessing nearest the correct number of shot contained in a large bottle.

It would seem that this decision means the end of the "country store," and the change will surely be welcomed by the majority of exhibitors.

CINCINNATI WILL FIGHT STAGE HANDS LAW

An appeal to the courts of Hamilton County, Ohio, will be made by exhibitors of Cincinnati to test the constitutionality and legality of the city ordinance just passed, requiring that every motion picture theatre must employ a stage hand during performances as a matter of safety.

The ordinance was passed by the city council under a suspension of the rules. Mayor Spiegel, who had indicated at a conference with a committee of exhibitors that he would not approve or veto the ordinance but allow it to become a law without his signature, surprised the motion picture managers by putting his signature to the measure.

"I have decided that as this is a matter which involves the safety of thousands of women and children of our city, it should have my endorsement," he said.

The legal contest, which will be made by Attorneys Miller and Foster, representing the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce, will be made on the point of the method of passing the ordinance. The exhibitors claim that the measure was passed under a suspension of the rules on the representation of the council committee on ways and means, that the exhibitors had agreed to the ordinance, as it was finally submitted with a few minor changes. No agreement to the ordinance was ever made by the exhibitors or their representatives, it is asserted.

EXHIBITORS THROUGHOUT BRITISH COLUMBIA FEAR "PACKED" CENSOR APPEAL BOARD

ALTHOUGH censorship in British Columbia is now on a much more sensible basis than ever before, a new danger confronts the exhibitors of the province. Following the agitation over "The Spoilers," standards locally were somewhat broadened, and Attorney-General Bowser gave some thought to the oft-repeated proposal of the exhibitors that an appeal board be appointed, to give final judgment on all films condemned by the censor.

While the "Spoilers" question was before the attorney-general, the Vancouver Social Service Council, a reform organization, held a meeting at which the manufacturers of moving pictures, the National Board of Censorship, and everyone connected with the industry was severely condemned, and the speakers even protested against the contemplated showing of "The Spoilers," although none of them had seen it.

Two members of this council have now been "approached" (by themselves) as possible members of the appeal board, and as only three members are contemplated, the establishment of a board with two such prejudiced members would be worse than no board at all. The only person connected with motion pictures who received approval at the hands of the meeting was the British Columbia censor, who was extended a vote of confidence, and the Social Service Council by its official acts indicated that it is prepared to accept the censor's judgment as final.

A board of appeal would in many cases be of real benefit to the exhibitors, but with two-thirds of its members staunch supporters of the censor, the motion picture would be completly under the control of the reform element. The exhibitors fear that the reformers would not always be fair.

WANT NATIONAL CENSOR BOARD IN CANADA

The demand for a National Board of Censors in Canada is rapidly gaining strength and there is little doubt that before many months have passed, some sort of national petition will be presented to the Federal Government in the effort to induce a radical change. Among the film exchanges and exhibitors at large, the feeling is practically unanimous that the present system is altogether inadequate and out of date, and that time, money and great labor could be saved by the installation of a national body.

It is also believed that such a move would draw the various branches of the industry into a closer, better and more harmonious relationship with the Government. Unquestionably, censorship is the moot question before the film world in Canada today. British Columbia to New Brunswick, the complaint is general, and the only thing that prevents an immediate move for relief is the lack of unity among the members of the industry throughout the Dominion.

HOUSTON BOARD REVERSES ITSELF ON "DAMAGED GOODS" DECISION

The Board of Censors of Houston, Tex., willingly permitted the play "Damaged Goods," to show at the Prince theatre, but absolutely refused a permit to the film "Damaged Goods."

"Damaged Goods," the play, had been carefully reviewed by the Houston board of censors at Galveston, when it played in that city, but when the management of the Prince theatre was requested that he book the play for Houston, it was confronted with a problem.

The Houston board of censors had refused the repeated requests of the management of the Rex theatre to show the moving picture "Damaged Goods," and the board had to reverse itself in order for the play to be given at the Prince theatre. This it very conveniently did.

"NATION" PERMITTED TO SHOW IN MEMPHIS, TENN.

After a consideration of a number of objections and also many favorable messages, the city board of censorship at Memphis, Tenn., has declared that "The Birth of a Nation" will be permitted to show at the Lyceum theatre as booked.

The production is to be shown in Memphis early in January. Some scenes are to be eliminated, but, it is said, that this will not materially affect the big drama.

FAT SALARIES FOR CENSORS AMOUNTING TO $28,320 FROM PENNSYLVANIA TAX PAYERS

ALTHOUGH constant complaints are being made by the motion picture interests about the way the State Board of Censors does its work, there are now twenty-one persons on the payroll of the board, who are drawing $28,320 annually from the State of Pennsylvania for the questionable service they are rendering.

This information has just been obtained from the censors' office in this city, which has announced the taking on of a large number of new permanent employes in reorganizing under the revised censorship law that was passed by the legislature last Spring. These figures are significant when it is considered that when the board first began work under the old law on June 1, 1914, the total number of its employes, including members of the board, was four with salaries aggregating less than $5,000.

The $28,320 now being paid out in salaries to the censors and their subordinates for work which is regarded by the motion picture interests not only as unnecessary but as an absolute handicap to the business, practically comes out of the motion picture men's pockets, for the censorship board admits it is self-sustaining through the fees collected for examining films which the picture people are compelled to pay.

In the reorganization under the new law J. Louis Breitinger, of Philadelphia, has been made chairman of the board at $3,000 a year; Mrs. E. C. Niver, of Charleroi, vice-chairman, at $2,500, and Ellis P. Oberholtzer, of Philadelphia, secretary, at $2,400. These three constitute the board membership, and their appointments by the governor were announced almost as soon as the law was passed last June, as was also the reappointment of the Chief Clerk, Joseph A. Barrier, of Harrisburg, who gets $1,800. The appointments of practically all of the following additional employes, however, have just been announced:

First assistant clerk, Robert W. Read, Philadelphia, $1,500; second assistant clerk, Mrs. Gertrude J. Lantz, Harrisburg, $1,200; stenographers, Miss Maude M. Ely, Ridgway, $1,000; Miss Caroline M. Horning, Harrisburg, $1,000; inspectors, George H. Locker, Philadelphia, $1,400; Charles E. Bell, Philadelphia, $1,400; Miss Florence E. Wrenshall, Washington, $1,400; Noel C. Kennedy, Langhorne, $1,200; Henry W. Lewis, Philadelphia, $1,200; operators, Samuel W. Johnson, Philadelphia, $1,400; Francis P. Brennan, Philadelphia, $1,200; Alfred Kohl, Philadelphia, $1,200; William F. Buckaley, Philadelphia, $1,000; assistant operator and patcher, John D. Burry, Philadelphia, $600; assistant patcher, Miss Frances Lavan, Philadelphia, $480; messengers, George J. Gorman, Philadelphia, $720; Charles H. Jones, Harrisburg, $720.

In addition to the twenty-one censorship employes enumerated, the board, under the very liberal new law, is directed to appoint two more stenographers at $720 each, one chief inspector at $1,500 and one inspector at $1,200, whose appointments have not yet been announced, and the board also has the authority to appoint such additional employes "as the work may necessarily require," their aggregate salaries not to exceed $5,000 annually. Moreover all expenses incurred by a member or employe in connection with the work are paid by the State out of the censorship fees.

In addition to the long list of salaried employes maintained at the expense of the motion picture interests, Governor Burmbaugh, it will be remembered, recently called on all of the 6,000 employes of every department of the State government to act in the capacity of "gum-shoe detectives" to spy on the motion picture exhibitors and report all cases of violation of the law.

EVANSVILLE, IND., BOARD PASSES "BIRTH OF A NATION"

A board of censorship, appointed by Mayor Benjamin Bosse, of Evansville, Ind., to pass on "The Birth of a Nation," scheduled to be shown at Evansville, with power to decide whether or not the film shall be shown or recommend that scenes that might be objectionable be cut out, has decided the picture may be shown. The board will remain permanent according to Mayor Bosse, and will pass on other films from time to time.

The board is composed of E. P. Wiles, principal of the high school; Mrs. W. R. Davidson, Frank H. Hatfield, Henry C. Murphy, Richard Rosencranz and Mrs. George S. Clifford. The board will have the film exhibited to them, and they will also hear citizens wishing to give evidence for or against the exhibition of the picture.

Representatives of the Negro Business Men's League called on Mayor Bosse recently to protest against the showing of the picture, holding that it misrepresents the colored race and tends to incite racial troubles.

OMAHA LAW KEEPS THEATRES FROM RESIDENCE SECTIONS

The city commission of Omaha has passed an ordinance setting aside certain districts of the city for residences only. Erection of factories, motion picture houses, theatres of any kind, stores or business buildings of any sort is forbidden in these sections.

The fight started when the people in the neighborhood of Thirty-sixth and Leavenworth streets attempted to stop the erection of a motion picture theatre. While they were quibbling with the council and preparing various petitions to comply with the law, the house neared completion. It will be opened soon. It is not included in the districts named, although they go all about it.

The move is said to be the first of a city planning commission granted permission by the last legislature to rearrange the make-up of Omaha. The commission has hinted at stringent sign rules on the downtown streets that would seriously interfere with motion picture theatre signs, as well as many other kinds now over the streets.

EDITH STOREY AND ANTONIO MORENO IN A STRIKING SCENE FROM "A PRICE FOR FOLLY," A DEC. 13 VITAGRAPH THROUGH V-L-S-E

EAST CLEVELAND UP IN ARMS AGAINST SUNDAY CLOSING

East Cleveland, O., is aroused over the question of closing picture shows on Sundays, and it promises to be a warmly-fought issue. The Wind-A-Meer theatre, located at Euclid and Lakefront avenues, has been open about two weeks. One Sunday East Cleveland police descended upon the theatre and arrested Manager Arnold Goodman for violating the Sunday law. This action aroused great indignation in the ranks of East Clevelanders, who want amusement places open on Sundays.

The motion picture managers are circulating a letter in which the demand is made that the picture shows be open on the Sabbath. The letters are being signed up at a rapid rate. There is an overwhelming sentiment in favor of the shows being open.

These letters now are being filed with the East Cleveland Council, which is asked to repeal the ordinance that prohibits places of amusement being open on Sundays. It is said that the council members are in favor of repealing the ordinance.

Manager Goodman was fined twenty-five dollars in the East Cleveland police court for having his show open.

COURT REMITS FINES AGAINST TORONTO EXHIBITORS

Judge Morson has remitted the fines imposed against four moving picture exhibitors of Toronto for allowing their theatres to become overcrowded, but a general warning has been issued to the trade forbidding the admission of more than capacity audiences into a house.

The fact that theatres are being overcrowded is an indication of good times. At least one theatre in Toronto was re-opened this week.

ILLINOIS TOWN WANTS NO CENSORSHIP

A censorship bill presented to the Alton, Ill., city council on November 24, was defeated on an attempt at passage by suspending the rules.

A delegation of negroes spoke in favor of the measure and theatre managers appeared in opposition to it.

In and Out of Los Angeles Studios

By J. C. Jessen

Special to Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Dec. 11.

BY a mistake on the part of a stage employe at the Rolin Film company's studio, a quantity of blasting powder was placed in a barrel instead of a similar amount of gun powder, when the head of the barrel was to be blown off in a scene for a Pathé-Phunphilm. All of the members of the producing company were covered with dirt and debris, and the assistant director was sent to the hospital with a part of the barrel imbedded in his leg. The camera proved amply protected, and an excellent picture was secured of the more-realistic-than-expected scene. Since the explosion the Rolin company's check book has been in use hourly in paying for shattered windows of houses in the neighborhood of the studio.

The stage at the Rolin studio now contains a complete and practical saw mill, erected and equipped for a coming "Lonesome Luke" comedy of the Pathé-Phunphilm brand.

Leo Loeb, late of the Keystone, has been placed in charge of the Rolin photographic department, and Fred Newmeyer has been added to the stock company.

The filming of "Pansy's Papas," a boarding school comedy of the polite style, is being complete by Director William Wolbert at the Hollywood Vitagraph studio. In this, Mary Anderson, as Pansy, has trouble with her real papa and bogus papas until she meets the cop. Supporting Miss Anderson are Otto Lederer as the genuine dad, Webster Campbell and Carleton Weatherby as the bogus, and Jack Mower the cop.

To Film Burbank's Life Story

The life and work of Luther Burbank, the wizard of agriculture, is to serve as a basis for a scenario for the recently organized Yelda Film Company at Stockton, California. The picture will be made under the direction of Mr. Engle.

Ralph Earle, for three years Pathé News cameraman in Central California, has resigned to accept a similar position for Paramount News. Mr. Earle has his own laboratory, and will make copies for the Coast editions.

While the eight-reel subject of the K. and D. Film Company entitled "Glory" is being cut, Jack Raynes, composer of the musical score for "The Politicians," "Lonesome Town," and other well known comic operas, is preparing the incidental music. It is the intention of the manufacturers to state right this subject, which consists of eight reels. It was written by Aaron Hoffman, well known playwright. The production was a very costly one because of the many elaborate sets used. In all there are fifty-two different interiors ranging from the kitchen of a small town cottage, to the palatial mansions of the oil kings. In one scene more than two truck loads of cut flowers were used.

G. T. Nichols has opened an office in the Monadnock Building at San Francisco, and will act as selling distributing agent for the pictures made under the direction of George Collins at the San Francisco Exposition, known as the Grauman features. They are expected to be popular.

Home of Ramona Reproduced

The home of Ramona at Calumas, Ventura County, California, has been reproduced in its entirety at the Clune Film Producing Company's studio. The original building was erected in 1836, and is of a distinct mission type. The buildings extend on three sides of a patio which is 100 x 130 feet. The home was made practical so that all interior, as well as exterior scenes could be made here. The company is now completing the second four reel episode of the story, the time of which is 1878. Adda Gleason plays the name part in this episode. It is the expectation of the company to have the entire subject completed by January 10 or 15. In order that there will be no delay, the Clune company is having the advertising matter prepared as the picture is produced, and by the time the last scenes are made and the film cut, everything will be in readiness for the opening.

The Selig Edendale studio has been leased by the William Fox corporation, and a producing staff arrived here Sunday to take up the first production work. Oscar Apfel will be in charge of the direction, Alfredo Gondolfi in charge of photography; Leslie Scott, assistant director; John Meighn, property man, and the players who came West are William Farnum, Dorothy Bernard, Willard Louis, S. J. Herbert and H. A. Barrows.

Jackie Saunders has the unique experience of kissing herself in playing a dual role of a five-part Balboa subject, appearing as two sisters who were separated in childhood, one kidnapped by a band of gypsies, and the other reared in society surrounded by every luxury. The male lead is taken by William Conklin, who appeared in the part of the brute man in the "Neal of the Navy" serial. Director Harry Harvey, who has been with the Balboa company for more than two years, is in charge of producing this, and this is the first time that he has directed Miss Saunders.

The new studio of the National Drama corporation in Hollywood, is rapidly nearing completion, and it is the expectation of the company that interior scenes will be made here within the next few weeks. The building covers a space 185 x 400 feet, and includes offices, laboratory, power plant and a 60 x 70 interior stage, and a 70 x 100 exterior. Practically all the battle scenes for this company's first production, "The Fall of a Nation," adapted from the Rev. Thomas Dixon story of the same name, have been completed. In these more than one thousand men were used.

Fine Arts Staff Reduced

Reduction in the producing staff at the Fine Art Films studio was made this week, and the members of the three companies making Reliance subjects were dismissed. It is understood that a contract with the Reliance company has been fulfilled by the D. W. Griffith producing organization. The directors in charge of these organizations were Francis Powers, Fred J. Butler and Ray Meyers. Their staff consisted of seventeen players.

Director Thomas Ricketts of the American studio at Santa Barbara, who prepared the scenario and produced the Mutual Masterpicture, "Damaged Goods," which is having very remarkable runs in all parts of the country, is now staging a three reel subject entitled "A Happy Masquerader," in which Winifred Greenwood, Ed Coxen, and George Fields appear in the principal parts. Mr. Ricketts has for the past six months been directing features in which Harold Lockwood was starred, but in the future will direct the players appearing in his present production.

ETHEL LYNN (Universal)

Cecil B. De Mille, director general of the Lasky company, is taking a few days vacation which he is spending at San Francisco. He has just completed the filming of two productions at one time, working day and night, and because of the overtime piled up in the several weeks necessary for this work, the business department found that Mr. De Mille could have a few days vacation.

Blanche Sweet Subject Finished

William De Mille, has finished directing his first picture, "The Ragamuffin," with Blanche Sweet in the stellar role. Other members in the cast for this are Tom Forman, Minette Barrett, Mrs. Lewis McCord, Park Jones, Florence Dagmar, and other members of the Lasky stock company. Following the completion of this Mr. Forman was taken seriously ill with pneumonia.

Announcement is made from the Lasky studio that Chester B. Clapp is not connected with the scenario department of their organization.

Anita King, the Paramount girl, has been invited to Seattle to preside at the opening ceremonies at the New Coliseum theatre in that city. This will be one of the largest motion picture theatres in the West, and said to be rivaled only by the Strand at New York.

During the past week the spare time of every Keystone cameraman has been taken up in an attempt to secure close-ups of a running fox, for which Ford Sterling, who is directing a comedy which contains a hunting scene, offered twenty-five dollars for twenty-five feet of film showing the escaping fox. Kenneth McLean, cameraman for the Sterling company, succeeded in winning the prize. He secured some exceptional film by placing his camera on the running board of an automobile, and after setting the fox free kept speeding alongside of it.

Cleo Madison Directs Vampire Story

The Universal Gold Seal company under the direction of Cleo Madison is at San Francisco making a vampire story entitled, "The Soul's Crucible," from scenario written by Miss Madison and Kathleen Kerrigan. Many of the scenes for this will be made in the famous resorts of the San Francisco's Barbary Coast. The members of the company are Ed Hearne, Bill Mong, Ray Hanford, Joe King and Adele Farrington. The company went equipped with electric lighting devices which will be used for making interiors in the dives.

A special feature company from the Universal left Monday for Tempe, a small town near Phoenix, Arizona, where exteriors for a five reel subject entitled "The Yaqui," adapted from the Indian story by Dane Coolidge by Olga Printzlau. Hobart Bosworth will be featured in the name role with a supporting cast which includes Emory Johnson, Charles Hickman, Jack Curtis and Yona Landowska. Lloyd B. Carleton will be in charge of producing this.

John D. Tippett, manager of the Trans-Atlantic Film Company of London, European agents of the Universal subjects, is in Los Angeles spending several weeks at Universal City getting acquainted with the players and methods of production. He was accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. George D. Grant, also of London. Mr. Grant is the owner of a number of motion picture theatres in England, and is in the United States studying theatre management, and all matters pertaining to motion pictures.

Night Scenes of Exposition Filmed

Some very exceptional light effects were secured by Al. E. Christie at San Francisco recently when night scenes of Fillmore street hill, and entrance to the Exposition grounds, together with the illumination and fire works at the grounds were photographed as a part of "Jed's Trip to the Fair." Two cameras were used to secure these scenes, and required two hours each evening for two evenings.

The mammoth interior artificial light studio at Universal City has been completed, and is now in daily use by the various producing companies.

The title of the Bosworth features has been changed from "Tainted Money," to "The Man who Made Good."

The Christie Nestor company is filming "Eddie's Devilish Deed," wherein Lee Moran as the devil, causes spiritualistic mother-in-law to change her tactics when he breaks up a seance.

The sub-title from a production being made at Universal City from scenario by Olga Printzlau, has been adopted as a motto card by many of the actresses. All subtitles of this are in rhyme, and the particular motto reads as follows: "Be careful when you linger till the ring is on your finger—Safety first."

Dorothy Davenport with Universal

Dorothy Davenport, who has been playing with the Lasky company in two or three productions, has been added to the Universal stock company, and will make her first appearance in "The Phantom Island," a three-reel story being produced by Francis Ford.

"Buck Simmons—Puncher," is a two-reel subject with a distinct western atmosphere, the name part being that of a cowboy lover of the sheriff's sister. The sheriff is killed in a street brawl, and the cowboy is elected his successor. As the chief citizen of the community, it falls to his lot to arrest a gambler who has stolen the affections of the former sheriff's sister, but he gives the gambler two opportunities to escape. The first is unheeded, but the second is successfully taken, and thus the couple are reunited. The entire cast includes Edna Maison, Leon Kent, Pat Rooney, Malcolm Blevins, and Hart Hoxie.

The misunderstanding of a husband who spends most of his time at the club, and who becomes jealous when he is told his wife attended the theatre with her physician, is the basis for the story, "One Night," being filmed by the Francis Ford Universal company, with a cast composed of Neal Hardin, Betty Schade, Alice Mason, Harry Fisher, and Francis Ford, as the husband. The husband enraged leaves his home to "get" the doctor. The wife, to prevent a criminal act, rushes to notify the physician, and is taken very ill as the result of the exertion. When the husband arrives, explanations are given and the family is reunited when the announcement is made that he is a father.

Animal Comedy Under Production for U

"The Dawn of Betterment" in two or three reels, being made at U. City from scenario by Ben Cohn and directed by Joseph Franz, is a heart interest drama pertaining to the struggles of an orphan stenographer who sought to aid her grandmother in the benefactress' declining years. Refusing to flirt with the nephew of her employer, he causes her to be dismissed, but opportunity is afforded her to show him her good will and she saves his life. This causes him to change his demeanor, and the uncle plays the part of the matchmaker for the reformed youth and the stenographer. The principals in this are Edna Payne, Sherman Bainbridge, Norbert Myles and Florine Hanna.

An animal comedy is being produced at U. City which points out the moral that faint heart n'er won fair lady. This is entitled "The Whole Jungle Was After Him," and reveals the dream of a young man who wishes to win the hand of an heiress whose uncle owns a circus. To prove his valor the youth purchases many specimens from a taxidermist, and in his dream they chase him. The girl is accustomed to circus life, and has learned to do many acts with the trained wild animals. Fearing that her lover is a coward, she has a lion cub planted to greet him one morning, and the expected happens. The story is by Paul Bourgois, who is directing and playing lead. The other members are Madame Bourgois, and T. D. Crittenden. The scenario was written by F. M. Wiltermood.

An agreement to forfeit fift ythousand dollars to the one who first pays court to a woman results in the agreement to disagree by two women haters in the Joker comedy, "Those Female Haters," written and being produced by Allen Curtis. Both secretly woo and win, and then keep the marriage a secret, disguising their wives as valets. The secret becomes known when they both decide to have the valets give them baths. Max Asher and William Frahney play the women haters, with Gale Henry and Lillian Peacock as the brides.

Rivalry between the owner of a flivver and a young man who holds down the job of chauffeur for a broker has many ludicrous situations. The subject is entitled "And the Flivver Won." The story is by Neal Burns, scenario by Al. E. Christie, and Horace Davey is producing the story, with Ray Gallagher and Neal Burns as the rivals.

Fake Health Resort Setting for 2-Reeler

The Universal company under the direction of Lynn Reynolds, headed by Myrtle Gonzalez with a supporting cast of Alfred Allen, Jose Sedgwick, Frank Newberg, Val Paul, and William Brenton, have returned from Mt. Baldy where they completed the two-reel subject, entitled "Missy." The name part is that of the daughter of a guide and trapper. The photoplay consists of the romance of the uncouth girl of the woods, who finally accepts the youth of the mountains in preference to the untrue man of the city whom she met while he was on a hunting trip.

A fake health resort in charge of the mother and a young man the mother has decided upon to be her daughter's husband forms the setting for the two-reel drama, entitled "One Against Many." The daughter returning home from college learns that her mother and suitor are swindling the patrons of the resort in that the famous High Bluff Mineral Spring is manufactured and not natural. She refuses the young man and becomes infatuated with a doctor with a pet hobby which he wishes to practice on others. This is to the effect that many human ills may be cured by dieting. The manager of the place is locked up as a smallpox victim, and the doctor enforces his treatment, winning the praise of many and the hand of the girl. Gloria Fonda and William C. Dowlan appear in the principal parts with a supporting cast of E. P. Evers, George Berrell, Lule Warrenton, H. F. Crane, Mary Ruby and Wm. Quinn.

The Richard Stanton and "Graft" special players are now completing the scenes of the fifth episode, the plot of which is based upon a strike among textile workers. Hobart Henley, starred in this serial, who was recently injured in an automobile accident, when the bones of his ankle were crushed, has been excused from the hospital, and has appeared in several scenes in a wheel chair.

Preachment against unkindness to the unfortunate on the grounds that it may be brought home is made in the two-reel subject entitled "The Rebound," written by Ben Cohn and being produced by Jay Hunt. This portrays the persecutions of a girl mother by the villagers, led by the deacon. The deacon later learns that his son, while at college, had courted the girl. The photoplay affords opportunity for a character sketch of the big hearted man to be found in every village. The cast includes Murdock MacQuarrie, W. L. Rogers, Arthur Moon, Mrs. J. Hunt, and Edythe Sterling.

National Producing for Kriterion

The National Film Corporation is making a one-reel comedy for release January 1 by Kriterion. "The Heavy Villain" is the title of this subject and portrays the story of a peace-maker and what happened to him. The name part is taken by Bill Parsons, three hundred pounds of smiles, who is aided and abetted by Master Billy Garney, and a pup. Publicity

The UNIVERSAL ANIMATED WEEKLY

Just Read This Carefully!!!

MAYBE you've read in trade paper ads how certain news weeklies had put over scoops. List, gentle sir—to the truth in the matter. The Universal Animated Weekly—had the World's Baseball Series—(first)—the Universal Animated Weekly had the big Auto Races at the new Astor Track at Sheepshead Bay; The Harvard-Princeton and Yale-Harvard football games—The Universal Animated Weekly secured the FIRST animated pictures of the FORD PEACE SHIP—"OSCAR II," leaving the Docks and the ONLY MOVING PICTURES taken of the FORD PEACE PARTY OUT AT SEA. The Universal Animated Weekly was the only news Weekly that showed the American Troops attacking the Native troops in Hayti. The Universal Animated Weekly was FIRST to show THE NEW YORK SUBWAY DISASTER PICTURES.

The HUGE WORLD WIDE STAFF of News Picture Reporters on the Universal Animated Weekly, are always FIRST with the NEWS OF THE WORLD IN ANIMATED PICTURES. And the BIG POINT IS THIS: THE UNIVERSAL ANIMATED WEEKLY PREFERS to show results ON THE SCREEN (which means bigger box office receipts to Exhibitors) than to shoot a lot of hot air and Broadway press bunk in the Trade Papers.

BIG TYPE—EXPLOSIVE PHRASES—BIG CLAIMS—and Broadway Press agents' bull, HAVE NO PLACE in the production and distribution of the Universal Animated Weekly. In that record breaking 16 week 32 Reel Series Serial

"GRAFT" SAYS THIS

"I promise every Exhibitor and every Fan who witnesses the different Episodes of 'GRAFT'—a treat in photo-play serials never before known in this type of production. Had I searched the field for years, I don't believe I could have been chosen for a greater part in any production than 'Tom' Larnigan—(brother of Bruce)—to carry on the work begun by Bruce to smash the miserable Graft Ring.

"If you have approved of any work of mine in other Universal productions, I pledge you my word I'm going to make you admire the work I do in 'Graft.' I have never made such an expression to either Exhibitors or Movie Patrons before and I do not speak idly. I believe in doing things rather than saying things, but this serial 'Graft' offers such magnificent opportunities for genuine uplifting of prevailing corrupt conditions that I am inspired, enthused and genuinely excited about it.

"'Graft' will be a sensation in every State in the Union. 'Graft' is going to do more genuine good than any photo-play ever presented to the American people. Not alone that it is the most gripping—most fascinating serial I've ever known of—it accomplishes things in the moral uplift of our Nation. Everybody is simply crazy over this serial. matter from the National is headed "Whar's the Constabule?"

An interpreter of the several hundred Indians now at Inceville made a statement that one of the warriors was suffering with smallpox, and in five minutes everybody on the big twenty-six thousand acre motion picture producing ranch knew it, and were on their way. Thomas H. Ince was one of the last to hear of the "epidemic," and induced them all to wait at the gate until the matter could be investigated by the health authorities. This required some two hours, but at the conclusion all were satisfied to remain at work, as it was found the man was ill with measles.

A company of Triangle Kay-Bee players, headed by William S. Hart, will go to the mountains in the vicinity of Sequoia Park within the next week to make exteriors for a Canadian northwest story.

An Inceville scenario writer claims the record for speed in preparing a story for the screen. It required him thirteen hours to build the plot, write the synopsis, and dictate the continuity of a complete five-reel Triangle Kay-Bee feature drama.

horses that heretofore have not been broken to leather have been leased for a coming Kay-Bee subject by Thomas H. Ince, which will be of the nature of an Indian drama similar to the Ince "War on the Plains" and Custer's Last Fight."

Mary Boland has been granted a short vacation, and has hit the steel trail for New York City for the holidays. She will return about the first of the year to be featured in other Ince Kay-Bee subjects. Among the other Ince stars who will visit New York during the holidays is Frank Keenan.

Arrangements have been completed whereby the New York office of the New York Motion Picture Corporation and the producing plant at Culver City are to be linked by a special leased wire, which will make it possible for the executives in the East and Producing Manager Ince to be in constant touch with one another.

Monty Katterjohn, of the Ince scenario staff, is to be sent to Kentucky to spend several weeks to get atmosphere for mountaineer stories.

Ince Now A Song Writer, Too

Director Charles Miller and a company of Kay-Bee players, including Frank Mills and Howard Hickman, have been spending the past week on a leased yacht on the Pacific making sea scenes for a coming Kay-Bee subject.

NORMA TALMADGE (Triangle)

It is now "Thomas H. Ince, song writer," for this wizard of the photoplay has completed the lyrics for a song to be introduced with the release of the Billie Burke subject. The photoplay and song are both entitled "Peggie." The music for this was composed by Victor L. Shertzinger, of the studio musical staff.

The lyric follows:

In the Bonnie Scottish Hi'lands,
Where sweet heather grows,
Lives a lassie who I'd willingly die for;
Ah! Her hair is soft and golden,
Her lips like the rose,
It's the kiss that lingers there that I sigh for.

After which we get the following exhilarating chorus:

FRANK MAYO AND RUTH ROLAND, LEADS IN "THE RED CIRCLE"

Peggy, Peggy, you're the sweetest girl I know;
The very soul of Scotland's in your smile.
If I knew 'twas I that pleased you,
Why, it's in these arms I'd squeeze you,
Bonnie Peggy, my darlin'—I love you.
I can hear the pipers playing,
They're callin' me back;
Back to Scotland and the days filled with gladness.
Oh! It's not the hills and valleys
That I long to see,
But it's Peggy; she's the cause of all this sadness.

Chorus

Peggy, Peggy, you're the sweetest girl I know;
The very soul of Scotland's in your smile;
I would give my kilts and plaidie,
Just to be your Hi'land laddie,
Bonnie Peggy, my darlin'—I love you.

HAL OLIVER, CARTOONIST, FOR AMERICAN CORRESPONDENT

The American Correspondent Film Company, New York, announces that it has secured the rights to the exclusive marketing of the comedies of Hal Oliver, a clever creator of animated cartoons.

He was for five years on the staff of the Boston Traveller, and did noteworthy work for a newspaper syndicate in South America before he came North.

Mr. Oliver is now preparing a serial entitled "The Strange Adventures of Professor Pipp," which will be released shortly. Pipp is a little man with a big purpose; he wants to tour the warring countries to see what is going on in the zone of fire. And he does.

His travelling outfit is perfect. Not a detail is lacking to make him the tourist par excellence. Reports of a few slight topographical changes in Europe prevail upon him to leave his Baeddeker at home; but that lack is easily overcome by field-glasses, folding camera, and rakish felt hat.

GROUCHY BEAR PAWS MACK SENNETT, BUT "IT'S NO LAUGHING MATTER"

Mack Sennett has had the unique experience of being knocked down by a bear. The instance happened just at a time when Mack was very interested in discussing unpleasant matters with one of his many assistants, and he unconsciously walked backward within reach of Bruno.

It was early in the morning, Bruno had not had his breakfast, and being in a very bad frame of mind, took one swat at the Keystone director general and laid him out. Mack later confided it was the most severe spanking he ever had.

CANADIAN FILM PAPER MAKES START IN DOMINION

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS

This magazine is being published in Montreal in the New Birks building, and Mr. O. A. Rogers is managing director.

Selig-Tribune Topicals Ready Monday, January 3

The Twice-a-Week Photo News Will Be Released Through the General Film Company, and a Special Corps of Artists Are Preparing Unusual Posters

ON Monday, January 3, the first release of Selig-Tribune, the bright and breezy twice a week news film, will be made through the General Film Company, and every Monday and Thursday thereafter, the result of the affiliation between the Selig Polyscope Company and the Chicago Daily Tribune.

The Selig Polyscope Company, the president of which is William N. Selig, of Chicago, is one of the oldest companies in the business. Mr. Selig discovered California as an ideal place for the production of motion pictures and sent the first motion picture company to the Golden State. He originated the first motion picture adventure serial, "The Adventures of Kathlyn," which was a tremendous success. Mr. Selig originated the wild animals in motion picture production and these Jungle-Zoo wild animal productions long ago were complimented by leading educators as object lessons in geography and natural history. Mr. Selig possesses what is said to be the largest privately owned collection of wild beasts and birds in the world, chief among them being his collection of cat animals, said to be one of the best in existence.

The Selig Polyscope Company possesses a Chicago studio which covers an entire city block and modern laboratories. The company also conducts motion picture studios in Los Angeles, Cal., and Las Vegas, N. M. Two great studios are owned in Los Angeles by Mr. Selig; one is located at Edendale and the other is known as the Selig Jungle-Zoo. This institution recently completed, contains a menagerie ranging from a herd of a dozen elephants down to a South American sloth. The Selig Jungle-Zoo is equipped with pleasure parks, dancing pavilions, modern studios containing every comfort for Selig artists, and with its beautiful art gates which alone cost $50,000. The Selig Company also maintains modern offices in the Garland Block, in Chicago, an entire floor being devoted to the business end of this large organization. The downtown offices are equipped with modern projection rooms.

It is this film organization that has entered into active affiliation with the Chicago Tribune for the release of the Selig-Tribune.

Every feature in this new animated newspaper will be an innovation, it is announced. An energetic corps of cameramen have been stationed in every important section of the civilized world where news is in the making. These cameramen are under the direction of "Jack" Wheeler, who will be the editor-in-chief of the Selig-Tribune.

The Selig-Tribune will have a distinct advantage in the aid of the Chicago Tribune's great news gathering facilities. For example, the Associated and the United Press are news services without equals in this country. Then the private news wires and the European news gathering agencies will be at the disposal of the Selig-Tribune.

John T. McCutcheon, cartoonist, author, and war correspondent, James O'Donnell Bennett, Caroline Wilson and others, will work in the interests of the Selig-Tribune, bringing their wide experience and versatility to bear in promoting the interest and entertainment of the Selig-Tribune.

Special correspondents and cameramen are stationed with every army in Europe and in Mexico.

Finally, a special corps of artists has been engaged to prepare unusual posters for the new enterprise.

CINCINNATI LEAGUE ELECTS OFFICERS

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Cincinnati, O., Dec. 11.

The annual election of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce will be held December 26. Nominating committees have been working on the tickets which will be submitted to the voters on that occasion.

It is understood that Fred L. Emmert, who has served several years as president of the organization will receive the nomination to succeed himself on both the red and blue tickets; A. Hettesheimer will be the candidate for first vice-president on the Red ticket, opposed by Charles Weigel on the Blue ticket; H. Serkowich, of the Chamber of Commerce, who has served during the past year as managing secretary, will be on both tickets for re-election to that office.

PAVLOWA POSES FOR NEW SET OF UNIVERSAL POSTERS

Anna Pavlowa, the Russian dancer, who is appearing with her Russian ballet at the Boston Opera House at present, made a special trip to New York City on Friday of last week just because she was dissatisfied with the artistic appearance of the poster to be used by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company in advertising her debut in motion pictures, when she will appear in "Fenella" or "The Dumb Girl of Portici."

She brought along with her her own artist, for whom she posed especially for these posters so as to enable him to get the proper proportion of her arms and legs, so that when the posters would be enlarged or reduced in size, they would be properly proportioned and technically correct in design.

Three Players on Burning Freight Car in a Signal

Director McGowan, Insisting on Realism, Orders Everybody to Stick to His Post Until the Last Minute, Though Dynamite and Powder Is Aboard

RIDING a runaway freight train, enveloped in flames, two cars of which were filled with powder and dynamite is what three members of "The Girl and The Game" company did last week. Director J. P. McGowan had insisted that nothing be left undone that would make toward the scene's realism, so every person was held at his post to the last minute of safety.

The scene shows a freight ablaze and the crew working energetically to prevent the fire reaching the cars filled with explosives. A stop is made under a water spout but in one of the cars was a quantity of crude oil which spread by the water, carried the fire beyond the control of those fighting it.

The cars on a grade pick up momentum and the crew, except Leo Maloney, playing the part of Storm, jump to safety. At signal station Helen Holmes hears the warning message. With the characteristic daring that has endeared her to moton picture fans she dashes out of the station, seizes a long rope, fastens one end to a telegraph pole, and then hurrying back across the track climbs a tree and then quickly makes the other end of the rope fast.

HELEN HOLMES AS SHE APPEARS IN CHAPTER ONE OF "THE GIRL AND THE GAME"

On comes the runaway, Mr. Maloney as Storm sticking to the roof of one of the powder filled cars. Helen climbs out on the rope stretched across by her. Mr. Maloney sees her and catching the girl's plan of rescue makes a frantic leap upward and grasps the rope along which he and the girl slide back to the tree and safety.

Just as the cars get past the station, there is a terrific explosion and the cars are blown to pieces.

It was necessary to take the scene twice, as the first attempt was frustrated by a short circuit. Then just to make sure that there would be an explosion, and no mistake, each of the doomed cars were given an extra charge of explosives, and the cars saturated with crude oil and gasoline.

The runaway cars, giving forth great clouds of dense, black smoke, raced down the track before the camera.

The flames ate their way to the explosives and two mighty detonations followed, splintered wood and railroad iron hurtling into the air to a height of one hundred feet.

High up on a telegraph pole Director McGowan was perched making sure that the camera caught all of the sensational action, which it did, although camera and operator came near disaster when a great piece of iron hurled from the roof of one of the destroyed cars landed within one foot of the tripod.

"The Girl and the Game" will be released as a Mutual special feature December 27.

Good Likeness of Corbett on Posters for Sun Release

Three Sheets of "The Burglar and the Lady," with ex-Champion Heavyweight in Chief Role, Show Half-Length of Actor-Fighter in Pleasing Color Work

THE Sun Photo Play Company, New York City, has prepared for the use of exhibitors handling its "Burglar and the Lady," featuring James J. Corbett, the ex-champion heavyweight, and Claire Whitney, now making a hit in productions of the Fox Film Corporation, a line of artistic posters taking rank with the best billboard publicity for motion pictures.

One set consists of a six-sheet showing a prominent scene in the film. It represents Corbett in the character of Raffles, the gentleman burglar, bending over the sleeping form of a child. The color work is harmonious and distinctive. A three-sheet consists of a quarter length of Corbett, and presents a striking likeness of the actor-fighter.

The picture itself contains elements making a strong bid for popularity. The story is dramatic and full of tense situations. Many of the episodes are brimful of action. Among these striking parts of the picture three may be mentioned as an example of the director's method for attaining lively interest.

Raffles is closely followed to his abode by a number of police, who stationing themselves at the door and the windows, it looks as if the fugitive must submit to arrest. But he is not the kind to give in so tamely, and furthermore, has provided for escape in just such an emergency. Raffles opens a trap-door in the center of the floor, but instead of attempting immediate flight by the lower regions of the house, he quietly unlocks the door opening into the main hall, then darts behind a secret panel in the wall, and watches through a peep hole for the ingress of the officers.

As the crafty observer imagined, they all make a rush for his supposed exit. The moment the last man disappeared Raffles steps softly from his concealment and slams the trap-door shut.

On another occasion the fugitive escapes from his pursuers by going hand over hand on a rope between two high roofs. The acrobatic skill displayed is quite thrilling.

Finally the police almost overtake their prey at the opening of a sewer. Nothing daunted, Raffles pluges down the ladder left by laborers at work some distance from the manhole, and begins a long race for freedom through the subterranean passage.

His pursuers catch up to him at times, but Raffles manages to bowl over enough to gain advantage by causing confusion among the officers. This underground chase is one of the most exciting scenes in the picture.

The plot is wholesome and contains nothing likely to offend a family audience.

PETROVA ABANDONS SPEAKING STAGE FOR METRO PLAYS

Announcement is made this week that Lawrence Weber, president of the Popular Plays and Players, has signed a long-time contract with Mme. Petrova, to appear exclusively in Metro feature productions. Under the new arrangements Mme. Petrova will practically abandon the speaking stage entirely and devote all her time to the making of motion pictures.

"VITAGRAPH FAMILY" A SOURCE OF INSPIRATION TO EMPLOYEES

The Vitagraph Family is the name of the new house organ issued weekly by the Vitagraph company. Its purpose is to create a spirit of loyalty, co-operation, efficiency and harmony among the various individuals and departments of that concern, in order to reach out toward a higher achievement in years to come.

The Family is edited by J. Stuart Blackton and Albert E. Smith, heads of the Vitagraph company, and besides containing a great many "Dont's for Directors, Actors and Camera Men," it contains some valuable information on the proper making of pictures.

The first two issues, which were given out with the payroll, were eagerly read by all Vitagraphers, and it is expected that the Family will become a source of great inspiration to them in their daily work.

The Family announces that it will "wield the hammer" when necessary, and "blow the horn" when deserved.

WALTHALL CONFRONTS MUSTACHE TROUBLE FOR ESSANAY PICTURE

They're having a terrible time at the Essanay studios in Chicago over Henry Walthall's mustache. In the early scenes of "The Strange Case of Mary Page," Mr. Walthall, as Edna Mayo's boyhood sweetheart, must appear with an upper lip as barren as the desert of Sahara.

Later, when the author of the tale demands that Mr. Walthall portray a successful attorney, a mustache is going to be necessary.

They're going to give Mr. Walthall a chance to make good his boast that he will be able to play the part without the aid of a single false hair. He says he can raise a mustache in two weeks. If he can he will break all known records in the fine art of mustache raising.

HARVEY STARTS "SUPERMAN" FOR UNIVERSAL

Jack Harvey, of the Imp-Universal Coytesville studio, has started on the production of a five-reel photoplay of political intrigue, "Superman," written by the Universal scenario editor, William H. Lippert, the theme being an incident based on a recent political scandal which occupied the attention of the New York Legislature some years ago.

Edna Mayo Is Anxious to Get Dresses Fitted by Phone

Essanay Actress Makes This Plaint When She Is Obliged to Leave Chicago for New York Once a Week to Try on Gowns for "Strange Case of Mary Page"

EDNA MAYO, Essanay star, wishes somebody would invent a plan for fitting gowns by telephone—a system by which a girl could get all the pleasure and none of the inconveniences that go with a fitting.

Miss Mayo, like every other girl, loves to buy new gowns, but it's a terrible lot of trouble when one's work is in Chicago and one's modiste in New York.

Lady Duff-Gordon (Lucile), who is designing Miss Mayo's wardrobe for the new Essanay series, "The Strange Case of Mary Page," is personally directing the making of Miss Mayo's gowns, and asks that the film star appear every Friday for a month for fittings.

When Lady Duff-Gordon "asks" it is the same as a royal command, and every Friday Miss Mayo must report, on time to the dot.

So every Thursday afternoon, Miss Mayo, who is appearing with Henry Walthall in "The Strange Case of Mary Page," now being filmed in the Essanay's Chicago studios, must tear away from directors and camera men and forthwith catch the Twentieth Century Limited for New York.

On Saturday she poses in New York for photographs in the new gowns, and Saturday afternoon she boards a train that carries her back to Chicago so she will be on hand early Monday morning to work until the next Thursday afternoon.

Lady Duff-Gordon has completed eight of Miss Mayo's gowns, which will be worn in the early episodes.

J. Charles Haydon of the Essanay company, who is directing "The Strange Case of Mary Page," visited New York last week to make drawings of the court room in which Harry Thaw was tried for the murder of Stanford White.

This historic room will be reproduced in every detail of the Essanay studios, and will be the court room in which Edna Mayo as Mary Page will be tried for murder in the serial picture in which she is to appear with Henry Walthall.

Prison Inmates Ask Laemmle for Chance to Be Actors

Requests Come After Announcement Is Made by President of Universal That He Will Give Two Convicts an Opportunity to Show What They Can Do

SINCE his announcement that he would give two inmates of Sing Sing an opportunity to show what they could do if given a good opportunity, Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has been deluged with letters from men in and out of Sing Sing, former inmates there, as well as persons serving time in various reformatories and penitentiaries.

In upholding Warden Osborne's policy of giving a square deal to the inmates of his jail, Mr. Laemmle announced in the trade papers a few weeks ago that within the next month he would give two of the warden's trusties a chance at Universal City, and since then he has been flooded with letters asking for a chance to start right with the world again.

In his mail this week Mr. Laemmle found a letter that came all the way from the Atlanta Federal prison, which contained the following plea for the opportunity to show what this individual could do if given the proper chance. This letter, taken from nearly a thousand, reads as follows:

Atlanta, Ga., Nov. 25.

Mr. Carl Laemmle, President,
Universal Film Company,
New York City.

Dear Sir—I note in newspapers of the 21st inst. that you are assisting Warden Osborne, of Sing Sing prison, by placing some of his wards in the Universal City, and give them a chance in movies.

Pardon the liberty for questioning you; could you give me the same opportunity, for I am very ambitious to become a moving picture actor.

To my knowledge I think that, if an opportunity is given to me, a little talent would be found in me which would be fit for that kind of work.

I am a native of Italy, and have resided in the United States since 1904. I was convicted at Syracuse, N. Y., an sentenced to one year and one day to the Federal Penitentiary at Atlanta, Ga. My full time will expire on July 16, 1916, and I may get out on the tenth of May. If you want more information please question me.

Respectfully,
LEON D. GIORDANO.

Just who Mr. Laemmle will give a chance at Universal City will not be finally decided until after he has had a talk with Warden Osborne, and the latter has suggested two of the most competent for the work Mr. Laemmle will have for them to perform.

Thanhouser Finds a New Film Star at Boston Ball

Press Agent Rubenstein Loses No Time in Getting Photographs and the Life Story of New Actress in Dailies of the Hub, and She Goes South for Five-Reeler

PERHAPS when Edwin Thanhouser commissioned his alert press agent, Leon J. Rubenstein, to escort the contingent of New Rochelle players to the recent Boston ball, he thought of the beauty contest that had been arranged to determine the prettiest girl at the ball and perhaps he had visions of stories in the Boston dailies telling of the contest and of its winner.

But even though Mr. Thanhouser, being a picture producer, has a good imagination, he couldn't sketch in his mind's eye the vision of the beautiful young lady whose picture appeared on the front pages of five Boston papers, with his own name, the brand name of Thanhouser, staring at him in the headlines.

Such, however, was the achievement of the wide-awake Mr. Rubenstein. It worked out something like this. The chargé de'affaires of the Thanhouser contingent picked the psychological moment to play his ace. Immediately after the grand march, the announcement was made that the prettiest girl in the room other than picture professionals, would be so adjudged and be given the opportunity to star in Thanhouser pictures.

The announcement caught the crowd, and out of the wealth of pretty girls present the judges, including dramatic critics of the Boston papers and Florence LaBadie, of the Thanhouser players, selected Sophie Sadowski, of 73 Bird street, Dorchester, as the prettiest of them all.

Five minutes later there was no more Sophie Sadowski, for Miss LaBadie gave her the name of Doris Grey.

The rest was easy to the alert mind of Leon J. Her picture was procured from somewhere and a few hours later every half-tone engraver in Boston was acid-etching the fair face of Doris. And the next evening there were stories galore in the Evening Record, the Daily Globe, the American, the Post and others.

The Record carried a front page sob story under the picture of the new star, others carried her favorite recipe for beauty, her favorite sports, her family pedigree, and her ecstasy at the thought of becoming a moving picture actress.

Mr. Rubenstein returned to New Rochelle, loaded down with his papers. Mr. Thanhouser saw them, and at an opportune meeting of the board of directors it was voted that Mr. Rubenstein receive a bonus for his managerial ability.

Such is the manner in which Mr. Rubenstein took Boston by storm. If a press agent's ability is measured by the number of lines, Mr. Rubenstein need have no worry over his future prospects. But, then, Mr. Thanhouser was always one to select efficient men to fill the important places in his organization.

As for blonde-haired, brown-eyed Doris Grey, she is bound for the South, after bidding her New England friends goodbye at a dinner tendered her by Mr. Thanhouser, which various members of her family, friends and film officials attended.

Miss Grey is in charge of Director George Foster Platt, and in the South the exteriors for a five-reel feature entitled "What Doris Grey Did" will be filmed. The picture will tell just what Doris did at the Boston ball in story form, and Mr. Thanhouser and Mr. Rubenstein will be numbered in the all-star cast.

CHAPLIN AND WASHBURN WIN PRIZES IN CONTEST

Charles Chaplin and Bryant Washburn took Essanay's banner through the lists to the goal of a contest recently closed in a motion picture magazine. The contest was to decide the greatest cast in motion pictures.

Chaplin was picked as male comedian by nearly two million votes and Washburn was assigned the villain's role by over a million and a half. Chaplin chose a $100 gold watch for his prize. Washburn is as yet undecided over a trip to Bermuda, an oil painting, and a list of several things reaching a value of $100.

ELINOR GLYN'S NOVEL, "ONE DAY," FOR MOSS

Hal Clarendon, formerly with Famous Players and Thanhouser, has been engaged by the B. S. Moss Motion Picture Corporation as director general of its productions.

It is the intention of the Moss concern to produce at least a dozen photoplays within the next six months. All of these features are the works of noted playwrights.

The first feature to be screened under Mr. Clarendon's direction will be "One Day," a sequel to Elinor Glyn's "Three Weeks."

SMILEY FORMS COMPANY FOR SECOND OCEAN FILM SUBJECT

Joseph W. Smiley, chief director for the new Ocean Film, who has just completed "Life Without Soul," five reels in seventeen days, based upon Mrs. Shelley's classic, "Frankenstein," which will be an early 1916 release, is now engaged in forming a company for his second Ocean picture, "The Fortunate Youth" Mr. Smiley's own scenario from the novel of the same name by W. J. Locke, who wrote "The Morals of Marcus," "The Derelict," and many others will be used. He has engaged Lilie Leslie as the leading woman, Wilmuth Merkyl for the title role, William Cohill, John H. Smiley, Charles Graham and Sue Balfour. Martin Faust assists Smiley.

"PAWNEE BILL" PRODUCES FOUR FIVE-REEL WESTERNS

Major G. W. Lillie, of "Pawnee Bill" fame, has produced four five-reel features at his buffalo ranch at Pawnee. Okla.

In addition to stories written around the life of Pawnee Bill as a frontiersman, the productions present typical western scenes, in which Indians, cowboys and buffaloes play their parts. Major Lillie appears as Pawnee Bill, "the white chief."

These pictures are being sold to state right buyers by the All Feature Booking Agency, 71 West Twenty-third street, New York, which is also booking them direct to theatres in Greater New York.

MOTHER OF D. W. GRIFFITH DIES AT LAGRANGE, KENTUCKY

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Louisville, Dec. 11.

Mrs. Mary Griffith, mother of David W. Griffith, motion picture director of Los Angeles, died of pneumonia in her home at Lagrange, Ky., December 5.

Mrs. Griffith was in her eighty-fifth year. Besides David Griffith, she is survived by two sons, Albert Griffith, of New York; William Griffith, of Lagrange, and a daughter, Mrs. Ruth Houghton, of Lagrange.

"Personally Picked Program" No Mere Slogan for "V"

President Smith and General Manager Blackton Watch a Picture Through All the Processes of Production from the Script to the Taking of Important Scenes by Directors Specially Selected for the Work in Hand by the Executives of the Company

"FEW manufacturers realize that the most important point in photoplay production is The Science of Selection," said Albert E. Smith, of the Vitagraph Company, recently. "That the selection of subjects is most important, cannot be refuted, and one of the great faults of the present mode of production is the fact that the heads of the producing companies do not interest themselves enough in the proper selection of subjects.

"In ten years the business of producing has advanced with gigantic strides. From seven to eight reels a week, as a total output for the producing companies of the country, to one hundred and twenty-eight reels a week, is an increase of over eighteen hundred per cent.; but with this increase in ratio the heads of the organization have sadly neglected the most important part of the photoplay.

"In present day producing circles the scenario head, as a rule, selects suitable productions for the director. These are then given to the director to produce, and, in nine cases out of ten, the real head of the organization has little to say about what is going on."

It was Albert E. Smith, president of the V-L-S-E, treasurer of the Vitagraph Company, and treasurer of the General Film Company, who first instituted the method of selecting photoplays suitable for the directors under his supervision.

At the Vitagraph Mr. Smith has adopted what is known as the unit system of producing. This plan works successfully for the simple reason that each and every director, as well as every production that these directors make, is personally supervised by either Mr. Smith or Mr. Blackton.

Thorough Reading by Executives

After the readers have read a script, the scenario chief, Marguerite Bertsch, then goes over it thoroughly, writes an opinion on it and the script is then handed to Mr. Smith. Mr. Smith, in turn, reads the script, not only a synopsis, but the scenario as well, and then decides upon the most suitable cast and director for the particular production. In this way a great many obstacles are overcome, particularly that of miscasting.

After the script is decided on by Mr. Smith, he takes the director in hand personally and goes over each and every point with him. The cast is then selected from the Vitagraph stock company and if necessary, a stage star is used.

"The director starts the production and every important scene is personally supervised by either myself or Mr. Blackton," continued Mr. Smith. "This same system is utilized by him as Mr. Blackton has his coterie of directors as well and devotes his personal attention to the production of which he reads and selects.

"After the 'takes' have been made, the negative is projected and if one or the other of us decides that it is not satisfactory or does not thoroughly illustrate the point in question, a retake is ordered. In this way an average standard of excellence is maintained.

"This particular method of production was instrumental for the new Personally Picked Program, which is now being released by the Vitagraph Company through the General Film. This Personally Picked Program consists of a four-reel dramatic subject and a single reel comedy.

Subjects Selected with Care

"Great care is exercised in the selection of subjects to see that they dove-tail nicely and afford an evening's entertainment of the highest quality. In other words, it would be foolish to combine a comedy-drama and a slap-stick comedy, whereas a heavy dramatic subject will balance nicely with a slap-stick comedy.

"In other words, we have assumed the exhibitor's and the patron's viewpoint. We have not produced pictures for the sake of producing them, but always have in mind the perspective of the audience. This same rule holds good in the advertising of productions, and we make it a point to have our advertising written and created from the buyer's standpoint, not the seller's.

"The Personally Picked Program, which will be released through the General Film Company, will have many innovations and novelties in the way of advertising. A campaign has been outlined which will standardize all advertising in such a way that paper, heralds and lobby display will have a similarity and will become recognized as the Personally Picked Program.

"In other words; the newspaper advertisements, the posters, slides and heralds, will have the same similarity of design, which will couple up in such a way that the patron will be able to immediately recognize this particular brand of entertainment."

The first of the Personally Picked Program, as decided on by Mr. Smith and Mr. Blackton, is a combination of "On Her Wedding Night" and "The Patent Food Conveyor." "On Her Wedding Night" is a four-reel drama directed by William Humphrey, whereas "The Patent Food Conveyor" is a comedy directed by C. J. Williams.

For years Mr. Smith has advocated the open market system of distribution, as the only logical way to sell merchandise. Heretofore, Mr. Smith believes, the exhibitor has often booked a subject and been disappointed in its drawing power, whereas, if he had an opportunity to see the picture on the screen and book the same, he would have had no one to blame but himself.

SADIE LINDBLOM IS INTERESTED IN THE BANNER AS WELL AS THE LIBERTY

Apart from being the head of the Liberty Film Manufacturing Company, and taking her own leads, Sadie Lindblom is financially interested in the Banner Motion Picture Company which operates from her San Mateo, Cal., studios.

The Liberty confines its attentions to dramas and features while the Banner, under Bill Stinger, the "fat comedian," is turning out comedies. Both companies will release under the Associated Program. Just now and again the comedy feeling gets hold of Miss Lindblom and she will appear in a Banner comedy for a change. She was in one last week.

CLARKE TO WRITE FILM ARTICLE FOR NEWSPAPER SYNDICATE

Harry Corson Clarke, the globe trotting comedian, has been asked by a syndicate of newspapers to write an article on moving picture directors—native and foreign.

Mr. Clarke who has visited studios in all parts of the world is now making notes in the studios of Greater New York.

Motion Pictures as Great Art as Stage, Says Blinn

No Drama with Powerful Story or Replete with Colorful Characterizations Impossible to Present Satisfactorily in Films, Declares Actor, with World Company

"I HEAR so many fellows at the clubs refer contemptuously to 'the movies' as a mere means of tiding over hard times," said Holbrook Blinn at the World Film's Peerless Studios, recently, where he is putting the final touches to his portrayal of "McTeague of San Francisco."

"When I was a stage player I used to listen to some of those chaps and sympathize with them. It seemed so sad to think of their noble talents wasted, as they put it, in such 'crude work' as 'the movies' afforded.

"I have learned better. Instead of looking upon their employment in motion pictures condescendingly those fellows would do better to wake to a realization of the immense possibilities for the improvement of their art the films afforded.

"There is only one thing in the drama the pictures cannot convey. The subtleties of dialogue, those little, quiet bits of give and take between actors on the stage, are lost. But what does the loss of a dialogue signify when such enormous opportunities are opened in picture work never known on the stage? Dialogue in real drama is the least essential element. I have watched through soundproof doors the playing of several actual dramas and found it possible to follow the story in almost every detail without hearing a word of the lines or knowing the plays beforehand.

"Dialogue of a certain kind, such as in the society comedies depending for their success almost entirely upon the cleverness of their lines, will always be a loss to the film world. Comedies of the highest sort will always be the special property of the legitimate stage. But there is no powerful story, no drama replete with colorful characterization and gripping action that cannot be produced in the pictures as well if not better than on the stage."

Director Barry O'Neill, Mr. Blinn, and part of the "McTeague" company have just returned from a flying trip to Death Valley, where the final grim scenes of the filmed novel by the late Frank Norris were taken.

Sam Is Still "Top Dog" in Ohio Censor Squabble

Board, Frantic to "Sic" Law on Him for Running Slide with Eugenic Caption from Herrington Speech, Growls Because Bullock Escapes Jaws of Its Vengeance

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Cleveland, Dec. 11.

C. H. BELL, attorney for the Ohio Board of Censorship, who has headquarters in Columbus, has sent a letter to this city, saying that Samuel Bullock, Cleveland motion picture manager, will not be brought to trial before Squire S. N. Schwartz.

In the first trial the jury disagreed. Squire Schwartz, who was asked by Chairman Charles G. Williams to retry Bullock, refused to consider a jury trial, stating that he felt competent to dispose of the case without having a jury to settle the questions involved. The censors demanded a jury trial, so Schwartz refused to have anything to do with the case.

Sam Bullock, discussing the tangle, says: "I don't care whether I am tried with or without a jury, and the sooner they bring their next action, the better."

This case is expected to establish a precedent that will curtail the powers assumed by the State censors. The State board is anxious to have Bullock convicted for defying them in running an extract from a speech made by Fred J. Herrington on the screen.

In the meantime Cleveland exhibitors are not paying much attention to orders issued by the censors and are running prohibited material. If the censors try to bring every defiant exhibitor in the local courts for violating censorship laws, it will take nearly two years, trying one or more a week, to dispose of the violations up to date.

The exhibitors are heeding the mandates of the National Board of Censorship on films, claiming that the national board uses more judgment than the State board in what is and what is not good in the line of motion pictures.

LIONEL BARRYMORE SIGNS LONG CONTRACT WITH METRO

Lionel Barrymore has signed a long time contract to appear exclusively in Metro feature productions, according to an announcement made at the Metro offices in the Heidelberg Building early this week. Mr. Barrymore recently finished playing the stellar role in "A Yellow Streak," a Columbia-Metro feature. It is Mr. Barrymore's present plan to take a rest of several weeks out of town before starting on his next picture.

Upon his return to New York, Mr. Barrymore will begin work on a five-part feature, "The Mysterious House," in which he will be co-starred with Marguerite Snow. for Columbia Pictures Corporation. It is the first time that these two stars have been engaged for the same feature.

Miss Snow is now in Savannah, Georgia. making exteriors for the Rolfe-Metro feature, "The Upstart," a five-part picturization of the play of the same name, written by Thomas Barry. "The Upstart" had a successful run on the speaking stage in both Chicago and New York last season.

PATHE ROOSTERITES FORM CLUB

The department heads of the Pathé forces have gotten together and formed a club for social purposes. The organization is known as the Pathé Club, and is now being incorporated. That the Roosterites mean business is shown by the fact that the club starts out with a capital of $1,000 paid in, and has received the hearty support of Charles Pathé and General Manager Gasnier. Officers have been elected as follows:

Honorary president, Charles Pathé; president, Mr. Gasnier; acting president, W. A. Sholto Douglas; acting vice-president, Ralph Navarro; secretary, P. Allen Parsons; treasurer, Gabriel Bardet. To the board of governors was elected M. Ramirez Torres, George A. Smith, J. K. Burger, George B. Seitz, and F. H. Knocke, the officers of the club also acting as members of the board ex-officio.

A dance and dinner has been planned for the middle of January, and clubrooms are contemplated.

SID GRAUMAN LOOKS FOR STUDIO SITE IN LOS ANGELES

Sid Grauman, of the Grauman Feature Players Corporation of San Francisco, who made all the motion pictures taken inside of the San Francisco Exposition grounds, has been in Los Angeles for the past week negotiating for a studio site with the intention of locating a producing company.

Mr. Grauman is associated with Marcus Loew in the best circuits of vaudeville houses, and was a former partner of John Considine, of the Sullivan and Considine vaudeville circuit.

Iva Shepard and Alexander Gaden With Gaumont

Actress, Engaged for Heavy and Emotional Roles, Will Join Florida Forces January 1, and the Actor Is Already South, Working in "As a Woman Sows"

IVA SHEPARD MALCOLM WILLIAMS GERTRUDE ROBINSON

THE Gaumont Company, which will now confine its activities on the Mutual program to making five-reel productions for release as Mutual Masterpictures, announces the acquisition of two new players, Iva Shepard and Alexander Gaden, and the appearance of Malcolm Williams in "The Idol of the Stage," its first photodrama under the new production policy.

Mr. Williams, who began his stage career at seventeen, and who has appeared in support of Leslie Carter, John Mason, William Farnum, Walker Whiteside and others as leading man in legitimate productions, having just completed "The Idol of the Stage" at the Galmont Jacksonville studios, has signed to appear in a Broadway play to be produced next month.

The visit of Mr. Williams to Jacksonville was also a honeymoon invasion, as he stopped in Philadelphia on his way South long enough to marry Florence Reed, herself a motion picture star of prominence.

"The Idol of the Stage" will be released January 12 with Williams in the title role.

Miss Shepard, engaged for emotional and heavy leads, will join the Gaumont Florida forces January 1. After stage experience in which she played leads in such favorites as "Trilby," "La Tosca" and "The Little Minister," Miss Shepard joined the Selig company in California, and has also appeared in pictures for Universal, Famous Players, Life Photo, Fox, Kleine, and the Moss Feature Film Company.

For the third Mutual Masterpicture company, now in process of organization by Gaumont, Alexander Gaden has been secured to play leads. He is now at Jacksonville, where he will be caught by the camera in "As a Woman Sows," in which he will play opposite Gertrude Robinson.

In addition to a varied stage experience, Mr. Gaden has been a member of the Universal and Vitagraph West Coast companies, and also appeared with Mary Pickford in "Fanchon the Cricket," a Famous Players film.

Picture Audiences in Boston Crowd Theatres

War Films Grip Public with Their Realistic Appeal, and the Tremont, a Legitimate House, Substitutes Stage Play for Screen Subject

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Boston, Dec. 11.

FRED MURPHY, owner of six United Film exchanges in as many cities, left Boston on a ten days' business trip to New York the other day.

War films are crowding the attention of the Boston public. The "Fighting in France" and the "Fighting for France" films are showing to large houses at Keith's Bijou and the Tremont temple. Meanwhile "The Battle Cry of Peace" is approaching the end of its run at the Majestic.

Managers of houses where the spoken drama is played most of the time can talk as they will against the motion picture, yet it is to the films they turn at once when some emergency throws a gap into their regular season. For instance, the Tremont in Boston found "Quinneys'," booked for four weeks, drawing patronage for but two of them. Hence the play comes off next Monday, leaving an idle fortnight before the next engagement. The manager at once turns to films. Beginning Monday pictures for two weeks will again be seen where "The Birth of a Nation" made its remarkable run.

The Toy theatre in Boston, in which the spoken drama starved, has been turned down by motion picture men as unsuitable for film shows.

The new Fenway theatre on Massachusetts avenue opens December 11 with a Triangle program, a symphony orchestra and all the appurtenances of a little Strand.

It is one of the finest of Boston's many fine film houses.

World and Equitable features are pulling big crowds to the St. James theatre.

The Faddettes women's orchestra under the direction of Caroline B. Nichols were absent from the Boston theatre for a week, and the cries for help from the Triangle patrons were so numerous and piercing that the orchestra is now back on the job. Nothing but the best music obtainable is worthy of films whose producers aim to make them the best films obtainable.

For the Christmas trade the New England Famous Players company is pushing two Cosmofotofilm company products, "The Two Columbines" and "A Christmas Carol."

The Exeter Street theatre in Boston did a huge business with the Lasky "Carmen."

Fox's "Galley Slave" at the Modern made a strong appeal to the patrons of the theatre.

"GREEN-EYED MONSTER," FOX, STARS MANTELL

J. Gordon Edwards has just completed "Green-Eyed Monster" for William Fox, starring Robert B. Mantell with Genevieve Hamper. The story, which is by Nixola Daniels, hinges on the curse of jealousy and deals with a man who covets his brother's wife.

Two Metro Companies to Take Exteriors in the South

Edwin Carewe Will Work Around Savannah, Beginning with "The Upstart," Featuring Marguerite Snow, While the Columbia Players Will Go to St. Augustine

GRACE VALENTINE EDWARD BRENNAN GRACE ELLISTON

TWO Metro companies, one destined for Savannah, Ga., and the other for St. Augustine, Fla., left for the South this week to begin work on the exteriors for several important feature productions, which Metro will release early in the coming season. One company was from the Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., studio, while the other represented the best talent of the Columbia Pictures Corporation's forces.

Edwin Carewe, who has just finished "The House of Tears" for Metro, with Emily Stevens in the stellar role, is in charge of the Rolfe aggregation and will work in and around Savannah, while Edgar Jones will direct the Columbia company of players.

Directors Jones' assistant, P. Thad. Volkman, who recently resigned from the Lubin forces, preceded the company at St. Augustine by several days in order to make the necessary locations.

Marguerite Snow will be starred in the productions made in Savannah, which Edwin Carewe will direct, while little Mary Miles Minter will have the stellar role in the features directed by Edgar Jones which have the Florida Everglades for a background. Director Jones, it is said, has been given instructions to look over the lay of the land around St. Augustine, and if conditions are favorable to motion picture making a permanent Metro studio for winter work may be established there. The same directions have been given Mr. Carewe in regard to Savannah and its environs, though it is not probable that studio sites will be selected at both places.

Miss Snow upon her arrival in Savannah will at once begin work on "The Upstart," which had a long run at the Maxine Elliott Theatre last season.

Besides Miss Snow, who will be starred, the cast includes George Le Guere and James Lackaye.

George Le Guere, who has just finished portraying the role of "Bibbs" Sheridan in "The Turmoil," the Columbia-Metro picturization of Booth Tarkington's great novel of the same name, directed by Edgar Jones and starring Valli Valli, will be featured with Miss Snow in "The Upstart." He will also play across from her in other Rolfe-Metro feature pictures, the exteriors for which will be taken in and around Savannah, which is as yet unnamed.

The Columbia-Metro aggregation of players, under Director Edgar Jones and with Little Mary Miles Minter as the star, whose destination is St. Augustine, left New York on a special Pullman car on Wednesday, December 8. They will at once begin work on two five part features, "Dimples" and "A Scrap of Pasteboard" both of them original manuscripts. Mary Miles Minter is starred in both productions. Miss Minter's latest picture is "Rose of the Alley," a five-part feature scheduled for early release in the Metro program, which was completed the night before she left for the South.

Tom J. Carrigan, a newcomer to the Metro forces, will be featured with Miss Minter in her two new pictures. Besides Mr. Corrigan, Miss Minter will be supported by an unusually strong cast, including Harry Ford, Peggy Hopkins, Ferd Tidmarsh, Schuyler Ladd, Mae De Metz and William Tauscher. Besides this number, the party at St. Augustine also includes Mrs. Shelby, the mother of Miss Minter, Hal Rosson, the head cameraman, and several assistants.

Director Jones contemplates putting on some big scenes in which a large number of people will be used. He will build a corduroy roadway through the Everglades, such as was used in this country before the Civil War, as one of the sets in the feature picture "Dimples." Another big set will be a large dam, which will have to be especially constructed for use in the same production.

McAULEY FINDS BUSINESS IN THE SOUTHWEST EXCELLENT

Manager Graham, of the new Merril theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., along with Mr. Longford, of the Wisconsin Theatre Equipment Company, were in Chicago last week and made an inspection tour of the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company's factory.

E. E. Oliver, the well-known equipment dealer of Cleveland, Ohio, was in Chicago visiting the Motiograph factory, last week.

J. E. McAuley, after an extended and successful trip through the Southwest and West, as special representative of the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company, returned to Chicago for a week. Mr. McAuley reported that conditions among the exhibitors in the Western states are very good.

ALLISON MADE MANAGER OF FAMOUS PLAYERS AT INDIANAPOLIS

Paul S. Allison, formerly assistant manager of the Famous Players Service, Inc., Cincinnati office, has been appointed manager of the Indianapolis office of the same company, and has taken up his new duties. Allison has served as assistant manager of the Cincinnati office since the opening of the office eight months ago.

Mr. Allison succeeds Samuel Plame.

LILLIAN DREW, ESSANAY, MAKES SHOPPING TOUR IN NEW YORK

Lillian Drew, one of Essanay's players, is spending part of the holidays in New York. She took her new car with her and is planning to burn up the roads along the Hudson. She is making a combination pleasure and shopping trip, studying the latest fashions for new gowns for her parts in photoplays.

Miss Drew is a Chicago girl, but is thoroughly acquainted with the Eastern metropolis, having played two seasons on Broadway. She has appeared in musical comedies, dramatic stock and vaudeville.

She joined the Essanay company four years ago and has taken leads and heavy dramatic parts ever since. Her work is especially notable in the recent plays of "The Reaping" and "Fifty-Fifty," in which she took the leading feminine role.

She has one great hobby, that of collecting oriental rugs. She has a large collection of the finest to be purchased.

Miss Drew recently returned to the Chicago studios after having spent the summer and early fall with the Essanay Southern company at Chattanooga.

"MAKING A MAN OF JOHNNIE," AN AMERICAN WARM WEATHER SUBJECT FOR COLD WEATHER PROGRAMS

Pathé Secures Screen Rights to Savage Successes

The List Includes "Madame X," Playing for 18 Weeks in New York to $20,000 Weekly, and "Excuse Me," Comedy Drama with Four-Season Run to Its Credit

RIGHT on top of the announcement of the acquisition by Pathé of the A. H. Woods plays comes the news that the same house has purchased the rights to Henry W. Savage's great list of theatrical successes. Mr. Savage has to his credit some of the most popular productions of the time, and two at least, "Madame X," and "Excuse Me," hold records as being the most successful drama and farce, respectively, of recent years. "Everywoman" also has made a great name for itself.

These two plays have already been filmed under the direction of George F. Marion, who originally produced them, and who has been Mr. Savage's chief producer for the past fifteen years.

Practically the entire original casts were used in these pictures, Dorothy Donnelly starring in "Madame X" and George F. Marion in "Excuse Me."

Both pictures will be placed upon Pathé's Gold Rooster Program in the near future.

"Madame X," which was written by Alexander Bisson, enjoyed the tremendous run of seven seasons, and for eighteen weeks in New York played to an average of $20,000 weekly.

It proved to be as popular on tour as it was in the Metropolis, and many theatre managers remember it as the biggest attraction they ever played. It will be released in six parts. "Excuse Me" ran for four seasons, a phenomenal record for a comedy-drama. It was written by Rupert Hughes and will be released in five parts.

Among the other famous Savage productions which before long may be seen in pictures are "The Shogun," "Little Boy Blue," "The Sultan of Sulu," "King Dodo," "Maids of Athens," "Woodland," "Somewhere Else," "Peggy from Paris," and the "Prince of Pilsen" (operas) and "Common Sense Brackett," "Behold Thy Wife," "Along Came Ruth," "The Stolen Story," and "Miss Patsey," (dramas).

Ten Shifts Made Among General's Exchange Men

E. J. Farrell, Formerly in Charge of Boston Branch, Is Appointed Manager for the Whole South, and Scates, Well Known in the Middle West, Goes to Chicago

THE General Film Company announces the following changes in the management of its exchanges throughout the country:

E. J. Farrell has been appointed district manager for the whole South. Mr. Farrell was formerly manager of the Boston branch.

W. R. Scates has been appointed manager of the Wabash branch in Chicago. Mr. Scates is very well known in the film industry, especially in the Middle West.

H. G. Morrow has been appointed manager in New Orleans. D. Prince, in the office of Dallas, has been appointed manager of the same office. A. L. Ehrgott, formerly manager at Bangor, has been appointed to New Haven.

A. Bevan, manager at New Haven, has been appointed to Albany. J. A. Koerpel, formerly at Albany, has been appointed branch manager to Washington.

G. Newhall, formerly of the Boston office, has been appointed manager of Bangor. M. Milder has been appointed branch manager at Cleveland. He was formerly at Pittsburgh.

N. I. Ehrlich has been appointed branch manager to Pittsburgh.

SCENES FROM TWO COMING KALEM PRODUCTIONS: "THE TALE OF A COAT" AND "BUD IN THE MUSEUM"

ASSOCIATED SIGNS NEW DIRECTOR AND CAMERAMAN

Special to Motion Picture News

New Orleans, Dec. 10.

Captain William J. Hannon, who has returned to New Orleans, brings with him Walter Morton, who has been directing pictures for Pathé for the past year and a half, and who will produce pictures here for the Nola Film Company, which will release through Associated.

The chief cameraman is to be Norton (Doc) Travis, who was the cameraman for William Fox production of "Lady Audley's Secret," featuring Theda Bara. Mr. Travis is no stranger to the Crescent City, as he was with William Fox when they produced the exteriors of "Wormwood" in New Orleans.

The scenario editor is William Morgan Hannon, recent winner of the national honors in the literary and film world with his book entitled "The Photo Drama—Its Place Amongst the Fine Arts." Mr. Hannon is also the author of a pamphlet that was printed and circulated throughout the United States by the Association of Commerce. It is entitled "New Orleans Through the Eyes of a Moving Picture Camera."

H. Guy Uyama, a graduate of the University of California is to be assistant cameraman. As long ago as 1906, Mr. Uyama was in the photoplay game in Japan with the Pathé studio; he was in the laboratory of Essanay in Niles, Cal., in 1908; in 1911-12 he was assistant cameraman for D. W. Griffith, in addition to his regular work for the Nola Film Company.

Former Exposition Manager in Charge of "U" City

H. O. Davis Succeeds Henry McRae as General Manager, and the Latter Will Take Company of Players to Orient for Tour of Year or More

Special to Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Dec. 8.

A CHANGE in the management at Universal City was effected during the past week when H. O. Davis, who has been in charge of the management of the San Diego Exposition, was elected vice-president and appointed general manager of the Pacific Coast studios. Mr. Davis took up this work on December 1. Henry McRae, the retiring director general, who has been in charge for the past six months, will go to the Orient with a company of players for a tour of one year or more.

H. O. DAVIS, NEW GENERAL MANAGER OF U CITY

Concerning the future of Universal City, Mr. Davis stated that it will be his duty to increase the capacity of the plant, and that his coming does not mean a retrenchment on the part of the Universal.

"President Laemmle and other Universal officers," Mr. Davis said, "have realized the necessity of a reorganization and systematization of this plant, and have delegated me to look after this work. A number of new ideas are to be instilled into the producing. A big future is in order for the company that produces educational films, and plans for these will be inaugurated soon. These will be made along an entirely new line, and the approval of educational leaders is assured."

After becoming acquainted with the directors and heads of departments at the film city, Mr. Davis was assured of their co-operation, and stated that within the next year, the number of directors would be increased to fifty, there being at this time twenty-four.

The tour of Henry McRae and company is referred to as one of the Universal's biggest undertakings. China, Japan, India and the Philippines will be visited.

LESLIE REED FALLS TO DEATH OVER CLIFF

Los Angeles, Dec. 8.

Leslie Reed, a member of the company working under the direction of James Douglas, in the making of an American subject near Santa Barbara, met death during the past week when he miscalculated, and leaped over a chalk cliff from the rear end of a stage coach.

Reed's hands were tied at the time of the accident. He expected to alight in the water at the foot of the cliff, but instead struck on rocks a few feet from the water. His lifeless form was immediately recovered by Director James Douglass and other members of the company. Prior to the making of this scene the director had pleaded with Reed that he permit a man with more diving and riding experience to double for him, but Reed insisted.

Mirror Telegraph Brings Aid to "Helen" in a Kalem

Plunge of Automobile Off Cliff Also Features Latest Episode of Railroad Serial—Breezy Comedy Celebrates Return of Lloyd V. Hamilton to the Films

Los Angeles, Dec. 8.

"THE SIGNAL" is the latest esipode of the "Hazards of Helen" series produced by the Kalem company with Helen Gibson in the name part. In this Miss Gibson, by means of a mirror, telegraphs information to a relief operator while bound to a chair and table, of a proposed robbery of the mail car. The second operator rushes to her aid, and the two are then forced by the robbers to aid them in getting them away.

The two operators knowing of an embankment in the vicinity, drive the machine to this and leap from it just as the car goes over a cliff.

A Hudson Sixty, 1914 model, was used in making the scene, and was so badly demolished that reconstruction will be impossible. Scenarios for this company in the future will be written by Hamilton Smith, who recently arrived in Los Angeles to act as Coast representative.

The come back of Lloyd V. Hamilton to the film has brought forth a breezy comedy, in which is shown the pleasures of a hospital, where he has spent the past six months caused by a compound fracture of the leg sustained while playing in a scene. Hamilton Smith is the author of the scenario.

In it the Kalem comedy makers visit Ham at the hospital.

The Kalem company under the direction of James Horne at the Glendale studio, are completing the last scenes of "Stingaree" series, and will next begin work upon a new serial, the title and author of which will be announced later. In the coming number, the Kalem company have advised the producer to be more lavish with his settings, and it is the hope of all that the coming picture will set a new standard, such as have Mr. Horne's series, "The Mysteries of the Grand Hotel," and the twelve episodes of "Stingaree."

ARBUCKLE AND MABEL NORMAND IN A TWO-REEL KEYSTONE

"Mabel and Fatty Adrift," is the two reel comedy now being completed at the Keystone. This was commenced months ago prior to the time that Miss Normand was taken ill, and she has just now sufficiently recovered to take up the work again.

In the story the pair of newlyweds buy a house and lot at the beach, and one morning wake up to find it has floated out to sea. They finally land on some rocks far from the shore line, and the first one to come to their rescue is the real estate man who sold them the first property, who now wants to sell them additional.

Luke, the bull dog of Roscoe Arbuckle, plays a very important part in this subject.

JUDGE TUGWELL EXONERATED BY COMMITTEE

Special to Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Dec. 8.

A. P. Tugwell, recently dismissed as chairman of the Los Angeles Board of Motion Picture Censors, requested a hearing with regard to the charges made against him, and the matter came up before the public welfare committee of the city council one afternoon during the past week.

Judge Tugwell had affidavits from every film exchange manager of Los Angeles which contradicted the charges recently made in affidavit filed by J. A. Quinn. One councilman pointed out that this was a mighty strange proceeding, in that the council had dismissed Tugwell, and were now trying him to see whether he was guilty.

The committee finally found that inasmuch as the affidavit making charges against Tugwell had not been filed with the city council, but instead with the mayor, it was unnecessary for them to proceed with the matter, and examined the affidavits presented by Mr. Tugwell.

However, the committee voted unanimously to file a report exonerating both Tugwell and E. T. Jorgenson, treasurer, who resigned at the request of the acting mayor, from any charge of misconduct.

FINISH ANNA HELD FILM AT MOROSCO STUDIO

Special to Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Dec. 8.

The filming of the Anna Held subject, "Madame La Presidente," has been completed, and a special short subject showing Miss Held's thirty new Paris gowns was made this week.

All of the producing staff at the Morosco studio have fallen in love with Miss Held, who has been very delightful during her first motion picture experience.

Public's Faith Boosts Industry, Says Goldfish

And It Will Be Rewarded with Better Pictures After the Cleaning Out Process Sure to Follow a Period of Overproduction Brings Readjustment

THAT the motion picture industry is approaching a period in its development when expansion, over-inflation and exaggerated values will be soon curtailed by a re-adjustment of conditions, is a statement made this week by Samuel Goldfish, executive head of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, on the eve of his departure for a mid-winter visit to the Lasky studios at Hollywood, Cal.

"The public soon will know what many persons within the photoplay industry already know," said Mr. Goldfish, "that there is more money being lost right now in the motion picture business than there is money being made."

Mr. Goldfish declared that the photoplay industry was not only suffering at the present time from over-production, but that it was being unjustly attacked by uninformed writers for some of the magazines who have entirely misplaced the motion picture as an amusement and as an art.

"Perhaps my statement that there is more money being lost in motion pictures than there is money being made will be a surprise to a great many persons," continued the Lasky chief executive. "But it is true, and the time is not far distant when the public will learn its lesson in financial loss, and when the motion picture industry will learn the effects of its folly by a severe and thorough readjustment of conditions.

"At the present time in the United States there is more motion picture film manufactured than there is film exhibited for the public. No industry can long withstand without upheaval such an unhealthy condition.

"As regards the attacks from without the industry from writers who are misquoting and misrepresenting the aims of the men engaged in the industry, I think I am reflecting the opinion of other manufacturers when I say we are concerned only with the effect of these attacks.

"One of the greatest factors in the growth and development of the motion picture industry has been the faith which the public has extended to earnest effort. Consequently, any sustained criticism that is unjust and untrue might serve to weaken this strong bond which the years have built between the public and the motion picture."

Mr. Goldfish said that much of the misconception of the present business and artistic status of the photoplay industry has been due to a general belief that before the present great development ends the motion picture will have supplanted the stage.

"Nothing could be further from the truth," said Mr. Goldfish. "The motion picture does not supplant and displace the stage. Nor is it the desire, the aim or the dream of the men in the producing art that it should. Motion pictures and photoplays are a separate and distinct form of entertainment from the stage.

"It must not be inferred, however, that I am of the opinion, as executive head of one of the large producing firms, that the future of motion pictures is not to be a brilliant one. Quite the contrary. I do believe that the day is not far distant, however, when the over-expansion, the over-inflation and the unsound conditions will right themselves.

"It will mean a cleaning out process, one of elimination of the unfit and unworthy and a survival of the fit. It will be a great benefit to the industry. There is a belief that money and money alone will bring success in motion pictures. This belief also will be dispelled."

Horsley Gets Ready for Mutual Expansion Policy

His Contribution of Masterpictures, Known as the De Luxe Edition, Will Present Crane Wilbur as Featured Player, and Include Animal Subjects

SIMULTANEOUS with the policy of expansion, as expressed in the announcement of the Mutual Film Corporation in this issue of the "News" that it will release, beginning in January, three five reel productions every week to be known as Mutual Masterpictures, De Luxe Edition, David Horsley, one of the factors in the Mutual's manufacturing force, makes known his perfected plans for the production of such pictures as he will contribute under the expansion policy.

In preparation for the production of his Mutual Masterpictures, De Luxe Edition, Mr. Horsley has just completed an indoor studio which will give him an additional studio floor space of 20,000 feet.

A step in the right direction is the engagement of technical experts to supervise the construction of props and the building of sets. Mr. Horsley has now on his payroll in Los Angeles Frank Crompton, one of the best authorities on technical construction in the motion picture business; Frank Stammer, a furniture designer and builder for motion pictures of long experience; and Bhogwan Singh, an East India native, familiar with the customs and manners of the Oriental. These experts have a thorough knowledge of conditions in many climes, and when a play is located in any country familiar to them suggestions are offered and accepted in selecting locations, sets, customs, and other matters.

By the expansion policy Mr. Horsley will have two Mutual Masterpictures, De Luxe Edition, releases. One of these is to be animal pictures, featuring prominent photoplayers, assisted by the Bostock animals, and the other is to be dramatic features presenting Crane Wilbur as the featured player. The first animal production is called "The Bait," and is scheduled for release January 22. Other pictures of the same nature will follow every three weeks thereafter.

The story is a drama of the northern Sierras and was written by Theodosia Harris, chief of Mr. Horsley's staff. The featured players are William Clifford and Betty Hart, who are assisted by photoplayers of prominence and the bear and puma contingent of the Bostock animal players.

The production is directed by William J. Bowman, until recently director for Francis X. Bushman. Mr. Bowman put on "The Second in Command," "The Silent Voice" and "Pennington's Choice" for the Quality-Metro, and a long list of plays for other manufacturers.

The animal scenes embracing the use of the Bostock bears and pumas are directed by Captain Jack Bonavita. Capt. Bonavita will direct animal scenes in all animal releases.

Another example of Mr. Horsley's efforts to make his Mutual Masterpictures, De Luxe Edition, the finest possible, is the arrangement just perfected by him with Roy L. McCardell. He will supply all the scenarios for the animal releases. Mr. McCardell is to furnish animal scenarios to Mr. Horsley exclusively.

Mr. McCardell has written many successful photoplays An instance of ability is pointed out in the fact that out of the 20,000 scenarios submitted to the North American Film Corporation for a serial Mr. McCardell's "The Diamond from the Sky" was selected. This work netted him the $10,000 prize offered.

Mr. McCardell is at this writing at work on the first scenario for Mr. Horsley. It is to be a circus story, one of great breadth of interest, and at the same time one that will serve to bring in the Bostock animals in performances of their exceptional feats.

The featured player in this play is to be Margaret Gibson.

The Mutual Masterpictures, De Luxe Edition, which Mr. Horsley will offer with Crane Wilbur as the star, will be released every four weeks beginning January 26. The first release is entitled "Vengeance Is Mine!"

Crane Wilbur plays Governor Loring; Carl Von Schiller appears as Richard Loring, the Governor's brother and the man who assumes responsibility for the death of the blackmailer to shield his brother's wife. Others are Gypsy Abbott and Brooklyn Keller. The two last named are the most important of those especially engaged. Other special engagements for the picture include no less than a dozen players.

By the new schedule the animal pictures will be released on Saturdays instead of Thursdays, as at present. The Crane Wilbur pictures will go out on Wednesday as heretofore.

The change into five-reelers means that the detective series announced for Centaur Star Feature releases with Crane Wilbur as the star will be abandoned. The scenarios were prepared as three reel stories so are unavailable under the new arrangement.

The Cub Comedies, which Mr. Horsley is also producing, will continue to be released as heretofore. One of these single reel fun creating pictures, with George Ovey featured, is distributed every Friday. Milton H. Fahrney continues as director.

DE WOLF HOPPER FINISHES "DON QUIXOTE" FOR TRIANGLE

De Wolf Hopper, D. W. Griffith's $125,000 a year comedian, who forsook operetta and musical comedy for the lure of Triangle films, has completed his "Don Quixote" picture for the Triangle-Fine Arts Studio, and is making another photoplay which will be called "A Knight of the Garter."

Mr. Hopper enjoyed the filming of Chester Withey's adaptation of "Don Quixote" immensely, notwithstanding the hard time of it he had in finding a lean and scrawny Rosinante that would bear his avoirdupois.

Edward Dillon, the director, gave him a cast that included Max Davison as Sancho Panza, Fay Tincher as Dulcinea, and Chester Withey as Don Fernandez. Stills of the "Don Quixote" film recently received show that it is in the true spirit of classic satire, and the windmill scene particularly will evoke hearty mirth when it is shown to Triangle patrons.

Mr. Hopper is glad, however, to get back to his more recent stamping ground of modern comedy characterization, and to put away for the nonce his costume togs. "A Knight of the Garter" will present him as a modern in the long cutaway coat. striped trousers and silk hat of a "A Matinee Idol," in which he was so successful a few years ago.

HEAD OF BOSTON CITY COUNCIL AT UNIVERSAL CITY

George W. Coleman, president of the Boston City Council and former president of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, was at Universal City recently with William Woodhead, publisher of Sunset Magazine; F. J. Wadleigh, secretary of the Ad. Club of Los Angeles, and John Lindsay, also a member of the Ad. Club.

These gentlemen spent several hours at the picture city, and enjoyed themselves especially on the several big stages, where they met many of the leading directors and film favorites.

Two of the best-known newspaper men in the West were recent visitors at Universal City. One was Frederick W. Kellogg, publisher of the San Francisco Call; the other, C. S. Jackson, publisher of the Oregon Journal, of Portland. They were accompanied by Mrs. Jackson and Miss A. Brown, of Los Angeles.

JUST TO MAKE TALK

By LONGACRE

NOW comes the report that the English market is neither so dead as reported, nor is it sleeping. As ever, melodramatic features with themes comprehended by English audiences are wanted. The chief aim of the second qualification is to indicate that American political or topical stories are not wanted. A story dealing with the defective baby question would not make a great furore in England right now, even though one cannot deny that it would be highly topical here.

The need of making melodrama for the foreign market for a long time influenced American producers to make pictures of Universal appeal. Since the foreign market has been restricted by the war more purely American pictures have been produced. But there is still a good market in England which should not be overlooked. Incidentally the British like comedies, especially in these war times—take it from Henry Wood of the Gaumont Film Hire Service of London, who is in America.

The first beefsteak dinner of the winter season for indoor sports at the Screen Club was held last Saturday with Adam Kessel, Jr., in the chair as re-winder. Among those to aid in the entertainment were: Bruce Weyman, baritone solo; Louis Leon Hall, stories; Harry Benham, tenor solo; Howard Crampton, impersonations of great men including Glen White; Gladden James, stories; Dr. J. I. Johnson, tenor solo, and Jack Harvey, baritone solo. Sid Bracey and Bill McKenna presided at the piano. President Billy Quirk was much in evidence among the hundred odd present. More beefsteaks to come looks like a good idea.

Those unassuming but important fellows who turn the cranks, members of the Cinema Camera Club, will give their third annual ball Saturday, December 18, at the Palm Garden, in Fifty-Eighth street, New York City.

Bert Ennis, manager of publicity and sales for the Eastern Film Corporation, arrived in town a few days ago for a stay of several weeks. He parked his car outside the Screen Club and went inside only to encounter one of the many Flivver owners. "Hello, Bill," said Bert. "Your car's outside right under mine." "No," the party of the second part wasn't Bert Adler, either.

Do your Christmas shopping early. Here are a few suggestions for gifts that might please:

Adolph Zukor, an offer from Mary Pickford to work free for a year.

Jesse Lasky, another "Carmen."

W. W. Hodkinson, a week off.

David Horsley, a transcontinental commutation ticket.

Carl Laemmle, Universal peace.

J. R. Freuler, a trip to Milwaukee.

Joe Farnham, Edgar Lewis, Jack Pratt and Tony Kelly, a pardon out of Philadelphia.

D. W. Griffith, a bigger theme than "Birth of a Nation."

Siegmund Lubin and Thomas A. Edison, wireless telephone to Henry Ford's peace ship.

William Fox, just a chance to broaden his activities.

Max Karger, a hair cut.

Richard A. Rowland and Joseph W. Engel, as much progress in the future as in the past.

S. L. Rothapfel, the completion of the Rialto.

Bert Adler, an automobile that will go without gasoline.

P. A. Powers, the sprig of shamrock he gave away a year or so ago.

Klaw and Erlanger, their entry into the motion picture field.

Samuel Goldfish, of the Lasky forces, is off on another of his transcontinental trips. He is off on a running jump from the New York offices to the studios at Hollywood, Los Angeles. The object of the present trip is something of a mystery; Mr. Goldfish has left everybody in the New York offices too busy to even talk about it.

Jack Pratt, of the Lubin company, was inadvertently counted out in the review of "A Man's Making" in MOTION PICTURE NEWS last week. Credit for the story and scenario was given to "Tony" Kelly, whereas, it now appears, the story was Mr. Pratt's. It is a good story, and the reviewer is sorry the authorship was not made clear. The real fault, however, lies in the titling of the film, which is a trifle ambiguous, and left the reviewer in some doubt as to just who did it. Business of making amends to Mr. Pratt for having written a good story. The reviewer, however, refuses to recede from his position that "Tony" Kelly is one of the best scriptwriters.

The whole story of the Boston ball was never told—may never be told, but every few seconds a new reel is released. Now it develops that Carl Laemmle figured as a knight errant, and rescued beauty in distress with as much of a flourish as any taller man could have done. There was a crowd at the railway station, and the police had stretched lines of ropes to mark off a lane for taxis. One woman was crowded against these ropes and fell over right in front of an approaching taxi. Mr. Laemmle, who was standing by her side, stepped under the rope, lifted up the woman and passed her back to King Baggott and Ben Wilson, who were standing by. Mr. Laemmle was so modest about his exploit that he left it for King Baggott to tell; so the news has just reached us.

John Henry Goldfrap, long head of the Fox publicity department, has transferred his interests to the World Film Corporation, and now occupies the Chair of Applied Publicity three floors below his former location. The word below is used merely to indicate the direction taken by the elevators, and has no other meaning in this case.

And speaking of publicity, several prominent manufacturers have recently been heard to express a wish for live, capable and trained newspaper men to take hold of that end of their work. The writer has in mind three well known newspaper men, with a number of years of active experience in New York, all of them eager to try their hands at motion picture publicity. Their complaint is that they cannot get a hearing, and do not seem to be welcome in the offices of picture manufacturers. For the sake of the industry generally, this department stands ready to put the manufacturer or distributor in touch with these men—or others like them.

Charlie Chaplin has added scenario-writing to his professional accomplishments. Besides carrying his own scenery, shaving himself and telling his own stories, the Essanay company now announces that Mr. Chaplin now writes most of his own scripts.

CHANGES OF THE WEEK

John B. Clymer is now the Pathé scenario editor. George Brackett Seitz, former editor, is on the staff devoting all his time to writing.

John Henry Goldfrap, publicity man, leaves Fox for World Film.

H. G. Stafford is now scenario editor of Universal City.

Premier program appointments include: C. Edgar Burton, scenario editor; John W. Mitchell, in charge of casting, and E. A. Levy, publicity department.

ABRAMS ASSISTANT TO JERMAINE IN TORONTO FOR FOX

The Fox Film Corporation, Limited, has now established, in Toronto, a suite of offices on Queen street, under the management of G. R. Jermaine. Numerous contracts have already been signed and the demand for Fox features is already created in that city. Mr. Jermaine is assisted by "Big Ben" Abrams, another New York representative, and both state that there is no doubt as to Fox features being a big success in that city.

Two Companies Now at Work for Lubin at Coronado, California

San Diego, Cal., Dec. 8.

TWO companies have been working at the Lubin studio in Coronado the past week. One of them, directed by Edward Sloman, has been busy with a three-reeler entitled "His Majesty Plays." The script is by Capt. Richard P. Reifenberick, U. S. A., retired, and the story is somewhat along the line of "Faust."

There is much chance for expert camera work, and B. C. Hayward, in the photography, has to handle some forty dissolving scenes in the course of the three reels.

In the cast Mr. Sloman appears in the title role, with L. C. Shumway as Merrill, Ben W. Hopkins as the senior Ashley, Alan Forrest as the son, May Cruze as the daughter, and Adelaide Bronti as Mrs. Pearsley, Ruth's aunt.

Melvin Mayo has been directing a three-reeler, "A Modern Paul," the script by Julian Lamothe. This deals with the life and works of St. Paul, in the opening parts of the play, with scenes laid in Palestine and Rome. The ocean strand at Coronado is used in depicting the Sea of Galilee, and there are also scenes of the crucifixion and other incidents of the New Testament.

Helen Wolcott plays the part of the wife, George Routh is seen as the murderer, Alan Forrest as the thief, and Jay Morley as the victim of all the intrigues, who finally flees to the mountains. D. L. Davis handled the camera.

Jay Morley and Alan Forrest came down from Los Angeles for the special engagement in these pictures, Mr. Forrest appearing in both. Mr. Morley's friends were glad to greet him again on the stage at the Coronado studio.

Capt. Wilbert Melville announces that work will commence the coming week on the enlarging of the stage at Coronado, so that there will be ample room for two or more companies to work at one time. The addition will be at least fifty by eighty feet.

Sometimes Nature has not made everything just to suit the particular director or manager of a motion picture company, even though the acting of the individual may be above criticism, and so it came about that Helen Wolcott, a popular member of the Lubin Company, has had made a new nose to relieve the retrousse effect of her own and she now wears this new "prop" in all her parts before the camera.

Julian Louis Lamothe, scenario editor at the Coronado Lubin studio, was born in the old French quarter of New Orleans. After leaving the public schools he attended Tulane University, paying for his college course by writing scenarios. His literary work began while he was in high school, where he was editor of the school journal.

He is a graduate of the New Orleans College of Oratory. He sold the second scenario he ever wrote, and now has over seventy-five produced scenarios to his credit. His present position is his first on a staff. Among the successful plays written by him have been "The Red Virgin," "Her Other Self," "By the Flip of a Coin," "As the Twig is Bent," "The Silent Man," "A Night in Old Spain," "The Taunt," "The Power of Prayer," and "The Level."

Among recent visitors at the Panama-California Exposition have been Cora Beardsley and Ethelyndal McMullin, who are about to start on a trip across the continent as motion picture photographers. Miss McMullin was formerly a motion picture actress, and was at one time comedienne for Ford Sterling.

It is the plan of the young women, who are traveling by auto, to make local motion pictures in each town of any size through which they pass, develop these before leaving and then show the local pictures with others taken at the exposition and other California points in some show-house in the town where they may be at the time.

"Wise Pen-Wavers to Stay with Pictures"—Cobb

Humorist Who Started Universal's New Serial and Modestly Admits Its Foreordained Success Because He Wrote First Chapter, Predicts Fiction Ideas from Best Authors for Films

Boston, Dec. 11.

IRVIN S. COBB, who is author of the first chapter of the Universal serial, recently talked with the News representative while a Selwyn company on the stage was struggling through an act of "Back Home," the play which Bayard Veiller has written from Mr. Cobb's Judge Priest stories. And by the way, it is high time someone began to put Judge Priest into films.

"The motion picture producer has got to turn more and more to writers of established reputation for his scenarios and story ideas," said Mr. Cobb. "Why, the motion picture is a wide-mouthed mill which is devouring an astounding amount of dramatic material from all corners of the world every day in the week. Already they are scraping the bottom of the barrel, and there is little left there right now but the nubbins.

"And no writer who has a good reputation should hesitate to give of his plot ideas to the motion picture. You can't hurt the film by being caddish about it. The film, as has been said just exactly one million and three times before, has come to stay, and the wise man with the waving pen will want to stay with it.

"Now the Universal serial idea is a case in point. Why have a serial in which one man or one small group of men chase the fair goddess of originality all over the lot and back again through thirty or forty thrilling chapters? Why not arrange the thing so that new blood can be injected into each chapter? That's what the Universal was doing. I started them off in that graft serial, with all the pack of famous writers baying at my heels. Now let the rest do their worst. The result must be—it can't help being—the most remarkable series ever filmed—because I started it."

International Trade Delegates at Vitagraph

Members Inspect Plant After Three Days' Session at Vitagraph Plant and See Motion Picture Manufacture in All Its Stages Under Escort of Host Sam Spedon

IN response to an invitation extended to them by Executive Secretary J. W. Binder of the Motion Picture Board of Trade, a large delegation of the members of the International Trade Conference which closed its three-day session at the Hotel Astor on Thursday last, journeyed to the Vitagraph studios on Friday and were entertained there in royal style by the officials of that company aided by Sam Spedon.

The party was headed by a band of thirty-four pieces composed of the Australian military cadets commanded by Lieut. Frank Seymunds. The cadets are making a tour of the world.

The committee in charge was: J. W. Binder, executive secretary, Motion Picture Board of Trade, chairman; Edward Earl, treasurer, and Arthur J. Lang, export manager, Nicholas Power Company; Albert A. Snowden, LL.D., National Association of Manufacturers.

In going through the plant the visitors were shown the motion picture at all its stages. They first saw a scene being photographed from the new play in which Edna May will star, under the direction of Wilfred North. They then went into the developing room and watched pictures coming out on miles of film after being immersed in the developing solution. They then followed it through the hypo tanks, through the washing tanks, into the drying room, into the assembling room ready to be projected upon the screen.

Afterwards, headed by the band, the entire party paraded around the courtyard where motion pictures for the Hearst-Vitagraph Weekly were made. Here they were addressed briefly by Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, who welcomed them to America and to the Vitagraph Company. Lieut. Seymunds responded and the cadets gave their "kangaroo yell." This for originality and volume of noise has any college yell on this side of the water beaten to a frazzle. J. W. Binder, spoke for the Motion Picture Board of Trade, Sam Spedon for the Vitagraph Company and Dr. Snowden for the National Manufacturers' Association.

Among those present were the following: Earl Gulich, Hearst Vitagraph Weekly; W. Stephen Bush, Moving Picture World; J. Keough, Editor, American Industries; Francis J. Lowe, Export American Industries; W. Thompson, Australian, and Lieut. Seymunds and thirty-four Australian military cadets.

DELEGATES: Vincente Gonzalez, Peru; L. F. Solorzano, Mexico City; Jaime Bragado, Barcelona, Spain; Baron J. de Neuflize, Paris, France; N. M. Marshall, Bombay, India; Octavio Guzman, Mexico; J. G. Larente, Cuba; J. Kruming, Russia; A. McLean, Australia; Francisco J. Peynado, Santo Domingo; Augustin Nieto Caballero, Colombia; Diego Martinez, Brazil; Francisco Escobar, Colombia.

Actors introduced to the delegates were: Maurice Costello, Templer Saxe, Hughie Mack, Van Dyke Brooke, Tefft Johnson, Kate Price, Leah Baird, Joe Kilgour, Tommy Mills, Edna May, Louise Beaudet, Arline Pretty, Lillian Walker, Mary Maurice, S. Rankin Drew, Wilforth North, Wally Van, William Humphries and Dick Leslie.

BIOGRAPH TRIMS COAST PRODUCING FORCES FIFTY PER CENT.

Los Angeles, Dec. 8.

The producing staff of the Biograph company was reduced fifty per cent. during the past week, when two of the four producing companies were dismissed. No announcement of the future intentions of the organization were given out at the studio, but it is stated the other two companies will be retained permanently.

The directors are J. Farrell McDonald, who is producing dramatic subjects, and Walter Coyle, who is making comedies.

SCENES FOR RAVER SUBJECT FILMED AT ACADEMY FOUNDED BY WINTER

Some of the scenes of the Augustus Thomas play, "The Other Girl," which is being filmed by the Raver Film Corporation, were recently made in and about the Staten Island Military Academy.

This academy was founded by his father, William A. Winter, the noted dramatic critic, who is now eighty years old and still writing. Mr. Winter senior was dramatic critic on the New York Tribune for forty-four years.

"Wid's Magazine" Gives Report Service on Films

Proprietor of Distinctive Publication Was First Man to Establish, in Evening Mail, First Successful Motion Picture Page in New York Daily

IT is no small undertaking to start a publication which is expected to live without advertising. That's what Wid Gunning has done and he reports progress which has gone beyond even his optimistic expectations in the short time that he has been "on the job." Wid has his offices over in the Times building. "Wid's," the magazine, is just four months old, although Wid was writing for a year before the establishing of the magazine, as film editor of the New York Evening Mail.

Coming to New York a little more than three years ago from Ohio, where he had been a newspaper man and an exhibitor, Wid Gunning became publicity and sales manager for the American Eclair Company, and was quite instrumental in their development at that time. It was at Eclair that Wid did his first writing for the film trade as editor of the Eclair Bulletin. His personal, intimate style made the Eclair Bulletin, an interesting little house organ.

When L. J. Selznick and P. A. Powers organized Warner's Features, he was put in charge of the editing of the films and the preparation of the advertising matter.

In June, 1914, he went to Europe with Sid Olcott, the producer, being desirous of getting practical experience in the field in producing work. With Mr. Olcott, he was business manager and assistant director. Plans had been made for Wid to direct a second company, under Mr. Oclott's supervision, when the war situation became desperate and in September the party returned to New York.

Then Wid went to the New York Evening Mail and established the first successful motion picture department on a New York daily.

Four months ago, he started his own independent publication, which is chiefly confined to reviews of all of the feature films.

MUTUAL TRAVELER, SEEN EVERY THURSDAY, IS MYSTERY GIRL

Although hundreds of letters have flooded the home office of the Mutual, asking for the name of the girl who conducts all the sight-seeing parties in the "See America First" trips on the split reel Gaumont-Mutual weekly release, the name of the Mutual Traveler will still remain a mystery.

A Mutual Traveler she is now, and a

"THE MUTUAL TRAVELER"

Mutual Traveler she will remain, until all of the garden spots have been shown in the attractive weekly scenics.

The dark haired little guide has conducted parties through New York, up the Hudson, through Washington, and is at present taking a trip through New England.

Boston has been shown in all its historic interest. The Berkshires come next, and the White Mountains will follow later.

The Mutual Traveller appears in the regular Mutual program every Thursday.

SCENES FOR "BLOODHOUNDS OF NORTH," UNIVERSAL, TAKEN AT ALTITUDE OF 7,000 FEET

The Bear Lake Region, seven thousand feet above the level of the sea, is where William Worthington went with his company of Universal players to produce the exterior scenes in the production of Walter Woods' three-reel story of the Northwest, "Bloodhounds of the North."

Herbert Rawlinson is featured in the production, with Agnes Vernon playing opposite him. The supporting cast comprises Barney Furey, Jack Wells, Jim Mason and Jack Pearce.

THIRTY SCENES TAKEN IN MILWAUKEE

Henry B. Walthall and Edna Mayo, the leads in "The Misleading Lady," and a troupe of actors which was used in the big Essanay production, descended on Milwaukee for five days last week and took thirty scenes there.

With the co-operation of the Milwaukee park commissioners and E. H. Bean, superintendent of the Milwaukee Park Zoo, the flying company made many scenes with a cub bear which was loaned them for the purpose.

Nearly all the wilderness sets, excepting those taken in the Adirondack mountains, were taken in the country just five miles out of the Cream City. Miss Mayo stayed only one day, but the rest of the company crowded a week's work in the five days. The bear was christened Adversity by the troupe because of his rough methods of showing affections.

STRAIGHT TIP FROM ARROW STEERS RAVER TO PILOT STUDIOS FOR PRODUCTION

Through the courtesy of Dr. Shallenberger, of the Arrow Film Company, Harry R. Raver, president of the Raver Film Corporation, has made arrangements for the use of the Pilot studios, located in Yonkers.

This gives the Raver company added facilities for the filming of the interior scenes of "The Other Girl," the successful

FRANCES THOMPSON (Raver)

Augustus Thomas stage play which they are producing.

At the outset it was thought that the production could be completed with the use of but one studio. Up to the present time the Gordon studios on Staten Island have been used exclusively.

SUPREME COURT UPHOLDS THE LAW AGAINST FIGHT PICTURES

By Telegraph to MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 13.

The United States Supreme Court today upheld the constitutionality of the federal law prohibiting the importing of fight pictures.

Attorneys for Lawrence Webber had applied to the district courts to test the validity of the statute, in an effort to bring the Willard-Johnson films, taken recently at Havana, into this country, after the deputy collector of customs at Newark, N. J., had refused them entry.

PHILADELPHIA MANAGERS HOLD BIG DANCE

Philadelphia, Dec. 11.

Several young managers of motion picture houses, including the Stanley, the Ruby and the Regent, gave a successful dance recently under the auspices of the Philharmonic Society, at Royal Hall, Seventh and Morris streets.

The profits are to be the nucleus of a beneficial association for house managers. The success of the first venture has emboldened the committee to arrange for a much larger affair in a short time.

The committee which so successfully managed Sunday's dance consisted of: S. K. Kaplin, chairman; William Katz, W. Carter and D. Lodge.

Every prominent exchange in the city was represented. Among the guests were: George Beihoff, of World Film; H. W. Bethell, of Metro Picture Corporation, and guests from the Fox Film Company, the Famous Players Exchange and others.

"GIRL WITH BIG VOICE" LATEST UNIVERSAL RECRUIT

"The girl with the big voice" is the latest recruit to pictures. This is Marjorie Lake, who has been heard in vaudeville for the past three years and who has just concluded an engagement on the Orpheum circuit.

Miss Lake joined the forces of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company at Universal City.

HELEN EDDY MAKES METEORIC RISE IN HER ART

Pallas Pictures have given a permanent engagement to Helen Eddy. Miss Eddy's joining this film is the dramatic sequel to her remarkable work in "The Gentleman

Helen Eddy is just out of high school, but has already appeared with Margaret Illington in "Romeo and Juliet," when she read the prologue for the Shakespearian production at the age of thirteen.

Screen Examinations

ELEVENTH KNICKERBOCKER TRIANGLE PROGRAM

("The Beckoning Flame"—Kay-Bee-Triangle. "A Submarine Pirate"—Keystone-Triangle—Four Parts. "The Missing Links"—Fine Arts-Triangle.)

REVIEWED BY OSCAR COOPER

AN out of the ordinary mystery story from the Griffith studios, a picturesquely beautiful offering from Ince, and Syd Chaplin again in Sennett's "A Submarine Pirate," make up the present Triangle offering at the Knickerbocker theatre, New York.

"A Submarine Pirate," run for a second time by request, was reviewed at length in the Nov. 27 issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Charles Swickard, who directed "The Beckoning Flame" had unusual material upon which to work. Though Henry Woodruff is the announced star of this story, which centers about the Oriental custom of "suttee"—the sacrifice of the wife upon her husband's funeral pyre—the real honors go to Tsuru Aoki, a Japanese actress.

Miss Aoki, besides possessing a face which seems to meet perfectly the screen's exacting requirements, understands restraint so well that her impersonation of the ill-fated wife ceases to be acting at all, and is transformed, in the spectator's mind, to life itself.

The settings are planned with the ability one expects from Ince. Particularly effective are the desert scenes, and the fire which consumes the little hut when Janira (Miss Aoki) gives herself to the flames in order to save her lover (Woodruff) from punishment at the hands of the Government for his rescue of her.

This picture has a strong emotional appeal, to use a much overworked expression. It arises from the work of the cast as well as from the theme. Throughout the acting runs a key of restraint which is as powerful in its quiet strength as the accompanying music. To the accomplishment of this, Rhea Mitchell, J. Frank Burke, Lewis Morrison, J. Barney Sherry and Roy Laidlaw contribute. C. Gardner Sullivan constructed the story, which in itself, is a guarantee of worth.

Equally pleasing is "The Missing Links," produced for Griffith by Lloyd Ingraham, with scenario by Marion Clarke. The mere enumeration of the principals in this rural murder mystery is enough to show its excellence as a screen offering: Norma Talmadge, Robert Harron, Thomas Jefferson, Elmer Clifton, Constance Talmadge, and Robert Lawler.

Here again naturalness, both in story and acting, has the upper hand, and the Griffith people have also solved the difficult puzzle of aiding suspense by providing the right amount of refined comedy. The locale is rural—another demonstration of originality as applied to a detective story.

The mystery, be it said, is pitched upon the identification of a pair of missing cuff links, and the solution, held back until the audience is ready for it, of course, is satisfying and complete.

Any picture goer will delight in a detective story, which is told so skillfully and with such a high degree of common sense, that it works in the return of a ne'er-do-well from college, his elopement with the step-daughter of the justice of the peace, and its accompanying elements of humor, the murder of the squire after the death of the bank president; the arrest of the ne'er-do-well, his rescue from a mob after the confession of the bank cashier and the final happy ending.

And the mystery is solved by a young country lawyer, who reads Gaboriau when he ought to be reading Blackstone. Robert Lawler makes this character a real one. As the two sons of the bank president, Robert Harron and Elmer Clifton shine. Never has Harron's youthful personality been exploited to better advantage. And if we were to single out any other player for especial praise, it would be Norma Talmadge. Her charm holds sway throughout the production.

Others of this remarkably good cast are: Loyola O'Connor, William Higby, Elinor Stone, Jack Brammall, and Hal Wilson.

"THE COWPUNCHER"

(Reelplays—Six Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY 2nd

THIS picture differs from the ordinary photoplay as much as a Wild West show differs from a society drama—but Buffalo Bill has as large a following as John Drew. It is not likely that a more massive and pretentious Western Picture will ever be attempted. Many of the scenes were filmed during an annual conclave of cowboys in Idaho, and some of the broncho busting depicted is truly marvelous. Interesting, too, are the pictures showing a "War Bonnet" round-up.

Hundreds of famous cow-punchers and Indians are introduced into the picture, and these picturesque figures of frontier life add greatly to the realism of the piece. The cowboys are not actors, but real plainsmen, and they register with all the ingenuousness and artlessness of children "showing off."

The story, although credited to Hal Reid, is quite negligible, being merely an excuse to bring in the various incidents of the play. The photography is fair and some of the settings are excellent. Altogether this picture ought to be sure-fire in houses where "Westerns" are popular.

"THE UNKNOWN"

(Lasky-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

IF you are looking for a thrilling, rapid-fire romance, then by all means book "The Unknown" at your first opportunity, for as a true love story this picture stands in a class by itself. It is laid in a romantic locale, and it is enacted by principals who well know how to get the most from their romantic roles.

The locale is Algiers. The story chiefly concerns members of that fascinating organization, the Foreign Legion. And the lovers are Lou Tellegen and Dorothy Davenport. The former appears to splendid advantage. He is typical of the part and acts the dashing young Englishman with attractive skill. Moreover he has well overcome that habit of "posing" for the camera which was more or less pronounced in "The Explorer," acting with the ability of a picture artist.

On the other hand, Miss Davenport is pretty and attractive besides skillful in her part of the adoring American girl.

IN THE SOLDIERS' QUARTERS

The story has been arranged by Margaret Turnbull from the novel by I. A. R. Wylie. Besides its magnetic romantic qualities, "The Unknown" has a decidedly original counter-plot, and everyone of the characters save for Captain Destinn, and in particular the several prominent members of the Legion, have the happy faculty of attracting immediate admiration by their deeds and actions.

The picture is exceedingly entertaining at all times and now and again a brisk hand to hand encounter, a small battle, imperilled clandestine meetings, and not the least prominent the persecution of the hero by his unknown father, increase the tempo of the action and incidentally draw the interest up to a high pitch of excitement.

The direction is good in all save one faulty instance, which perhaps can be laid to the Lasky laboratory. There is a series of scenes taking place on a desert, and judging from the preceding indication of time, the clock must register somewhere in the neighborhood of 3 or 4 a. m., yet it is broad, shining, bright daylight. It is an even gamble whether or not this will be noticed by the average picture goer.

The romance is between the Englishman of the Foreign Legion and an American girl. But a captain of the Legion, unknown to both of them, is the father of the young man. He also desires the girl, and shielded by his superior position he protects his rival. Finally he manages to have him sentenced to death. He escapes in company with the girl. They flee, are overtaken by the captain, who at last recognizes his son by means of the Victoria Cross. He repents, of course, and lets them go.

"OVERNIGHT"

(World Film—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

PHILLIP BARTHOLOMAE'S farce has been made over into a very clever comedy-drama for the screen; although the thread of the story is somewhat slow in unwinding itself, there is plenty of incident, with snap and go to it when the plot does get fairly started, and numerous clever pieces of business have been worked in.

By the use of the Hudson river and the Hudson river boat, a wide sweep of atmosphere has been pictured, and this greatly enhances the general attractiveness of the subject. Vivian Martin is a dainty and charming star. She screens well and gets her work across in clean, clear manner.

The plot is a light and airy thing, as is to be expected in farces. Two bridal couples embark on the same boat. One husband and one wife go ashore the one to send a telegram and the other to recover a lost suit case. The boat leaves them, and the rest of the picture concerns the experiences of the two left on the boat, and the two on shore attempting to catch the boat by rail, horse and decrepit automobile.

The boat party finally lands and creates a furore by appearing at the Birch Bark Inn, where they are hailed as husband and wife. They secure separate rooms and have retired, when the other couple, having broken down several times, also arrive at the same inn. They are also assigned to separate rooms, but before they leave the office their voices are heard upstairs, and the separated ones are reunited.

The villagers, collected to serenade the bridal couples, are scandalized at the "goin's on" and both couples are put out of the hotel in a driving rain storm. But they are happily reunited and care nothing for rain or anything else.

The locations have been selected with excellent artistic taste, and many of the scenes along the Hudson are impressive.

Sam B. Hardy, Herbert Yost, Florence Morrison, William Jefferson, Jessie Lewis and Kitty Baldwin give some excellent character portrayals.

"RECKONING DAY"

(Essanay—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY 2nd

IT seems to the writer that the Essanay multiple-reel program features have greatly improved of late, and the excellence of this picture is good evidence of the contention. Skillful directing puts punch into a not unusual story, and the finished acting further adds to the general impression of quality.

Elizabeth Burbridge, the new ingenue, is a competent actress, and the abilities of Ernest Maupain, E. H. Calvert, and Sydney Ainsworth are well known.

Gideon Winfield, a bank employee, steals money to pay his gambling debts. He marries Clara Worthington, the daughter of a financier, and asks his father-in-law to pay the remainder of his losses. The theft of the bank's funds is discovered, and Winfield leaves town. Clara's father, to escape notoriety, pays the defalcation.

Some time later Clara hears that her husband has been killed, and she remarries. He is really alive, but is killed by a burglar as he is entering Clara's home to blackmail her. Clara is accused of the crime, but at the last minute is saved by the burglar, who confesses.

BRUISES AND SPRAINS FOR ESSANAY ACTORS IN REALISTIC FIGHT BEFORE CAMERA

ERNEST MAUPAIN, who plays the villain's part in "The Law's Decree," Essanay's three-act drama, showed his physical strength at the cost of a sprained hand and many severe bruises sustained by John Cossar, who is the hero of the story.

Maupain and Cossar have a furious battle when the hero discovers that the villain has tricked him into buying worthless shares. The director of the picture determined that the fight would be most realistic. The two combatants were worked up into a high pitch of excitement in other scenes and when the fight was staged they sprang at each other with vim. When the dust cleared away, Cossar's hand was sprained and his back had been wrenched. Maupain's eye was discolored and he was bruised about the face.

But, as the director said, "That fight was a wonder." There was no necessity for a re-take.

"THE GREATER WILL"

(Pathé-Gold Rooster—Five Reels)

(REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE)

"THE GREATER WILL" is the simplest sort of feature. It has a plain story to tell and it tells it plainly. As a result of its straightforward simplicity and partly as a result of the theme's familiarity, "The Greater Will," seldom waxes intense, it never soars to critical heights, but it keeps on evenly and like a good narrative that it is, it is interesting.

The picture was made by Premo and co-stars Cyril Maude and Lois Meredith. The former has his favorite role of the old man and plays with skill throughout, handling his few big scenes in effective style. Miss Meredith as his daughter has a sympathetic role, the kind which she well knows how to portray.

"The Greater Will" has to do with hypnotism, and while the ability of pictures based on such lines to convince is always open to question, it must be said that the producer of this feature has overcome many of the handicaps of the story in realistic style.

In fact the direction can successfully pass muster in all major particulars. The settings, specially the ball room and the antique shop are very well arranged. The photography is usually purposely subdued and nicely tinted throughout.

The story tells how the old antique dealer's daughter is wronged by a man who employed hypnotism to accomplish his ends. The girl dies and later when her sorrowing father again meets the man he tells him that at eleven o'clock on each night a vision of the dead girl will appear before him.

By exercising his will the old man causes this vision to appear before his enemy, who, finally driven to distraction, takes his own life.

The supporting cast, in particular the interpreter of the heavy, plays with a uniform consistency that warrants no serious deprecatory criticism.

"AUTHOR! AUTHOR!"

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY 2nd

THOSE who were aware of Art Acord's proficiency in cowboy stunts have wondered why the hero of the "Buck Parvin" series has not introduced more of his riding stunts and lariat specialties into his pictures. This last release of the notable comedy series gives Acord many opportunities to display his prowess with horseflesh.

In addition to the Wild West entertainment, this picture has a more consistent plot, more comedy situations, and faster action than any previous picture of this series. All the fun is clean and legitimate, and the cast, even down to the least important super, is well selected.

Marcellus Peckinpaw, the author of the best-seller, "The Lure of the West," sells the film rights of his book to the Titan Moving Picture Company, on the condition that he be allowed to personally superintend the production of the picture.

He travels out to Los Angeles, and becomes the bug-bear of Montague, the director, for he objects to every thriller put in the picture, insisting "It isn't in the book."

Finally Buck Parvin, the cowboy-actor, decides to rid the studio of this literary pest. He plots with Lone Wolf, an Indian member of the company. Buck tells Peckinpaw of Lone Wolf's ferocity, and thoroughly scares the diminutive author.

The next day, Lone Wolf, with brandished revolver, drives Peckinpaw from camp, and chases him for many miles. When the author returns to the settlement and discovers that Lone Wolf is an educated man, with a Harvard degree, he returns to the effete East, a thoroughly chastened man.

"BONDWOMEN"

(Kleine-Edison-Kleine—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"BONDWOMEN" sets out to demonstrate that a wrong exists in any household where the husband has complete charge of the exchequer. And in a melodramatic way it eventually accomplishes its purpose. But "Bondwomen" should be designated as a melodrama and not as a moral lesson in economics. To be sure, the finale discovers the husband handing his wife a bank account entered jointly in his and her name, but the husband's awakening is caused by a chain of happenings quite foreign to the economic question.

But "Bondwomen" is a lively melodrama and good in most respects, while its problematical touch adds enough novelty and originality to lift it from the conventional class of features. There are times when the director or author has missed an opportunity to add strength to a scene by neglecting to insert a sub-title, but these places are few and can still be remedied.

Maude Fealy has the featured role of Norma Ellis, the mistreated wife of Dr. Ellis, the gentleman who believes that all the financial care of the household should rest with the husband. Miss Fealy gives an expressive performance and makes the most of the appealing possibilities of her character.

A large supporting cast appears, including John Sainpolis as the doctor, Harmon McGregor as his wayward brother, Iva Shepard as a reformed girl of the underworld, Mildred Gregory as Snowdrop, David Landau as Power, and Harry Knowles, Shirley De Me, Maurice Steuart, Jr., and Frederic Sumner.

SNOWDROP'S REVENGE

The photography never warrants adverse criticism while the settings are very good, being appropriately realistic in every instance. The direction in general is quite adequate. The scenes are well timed and the plot moves forward with an even naturalness that is always pleasing.

The story opens with Norma attempting to assert her rights as regards household money matters. Her husband is obdurate and refuses to give her the chance she desires. His brother, a dope fiend, checked in his attempt to procure more of the terrible powder by a mutual friend of the doctor and his wife, suggests to the husband that he watch this friend, Power.

The husband grows jealous and finally forces a separation. Later the wayward brother, being cured of his habit by Power, confesses to everybody and a reunion is brought about.

VIEWS OF STRIKING MOMENTS IN "TWENTY YEARS AGO," "NEVERMORE," AND "PITY THE POOR"

"SEALED LIPS"

(Equitable—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY OSCAR COOPER

MAXWELL GRAY'S novel, "The Silence of Dean Maitland," has been here picturized under the direction of John Ince, with William Courtenay as the star.

On the screen the story is resolved into a high-class melodrama, which, as everybody knows by this time, is the sort of picture audiences heartily welcome at intervals.

When we call it high class we are thinking particularly of the settings. The acting is good. It is not required, we believe, that every picture shall be brilliantly acted. But it is required that the cast shall be able to make the story interesting and affecting—in this case. The requirement is fulfilled by Courtenay, Arthur Ashley, Mary Charleson, Adele Ray and Marie Wells in the principal roles.

Courtenay gives a sympathetic impersonation of Henry Everard,

THE DEATH OF CYRIL MAITLAND

the young physician who shoulders the guilt of Cyril Maitland, after the latter has ruined a pretty girl of his parish, and then murdered her father in a quarrel. Ashley, as the young English clergyman, is necessarily the central figure in the action, and carries his part well. He is at his best in what can accurately be called the big scenes of the production: the trial, and the final cathedral scene in which the preacher confesses his guilt before a large congregation and then drops dead.

The latter scene is excellently put on, and furnishes an effective climax. The interiors are up to the best standard of motion picture production, and are a delight to the eye. Most of them also are of considerable depth. In general, the director deserves specific commendation for the care and intelligence he exercised.

Summed up, "Sealed Lips" is a picture in which old but interesting dramatic material has been handled in an acceptable manner. For that reason, as well as because of the style in which it was produced, it is a good picture for the average audience.

"PERKINS' PEP PRODUCER"

(Selig—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY 2nd

THIS current release of the Bloom Center Chronicles differs in no very material degree from the other pictures of the series. Audiences that have seen the other installments know pretty well by this time the abilities and limitations of each of the actors. If your patrons have taken kindly to the rural comedy furnished in previous Chronicles, they will not be disappointed in this one.

The basic idea of the play is clever, but it seems to the writer that some amplification of material was necessary to produce two thousand feet. Some of the business is original, but much of it is not quite new. Notwithstanding its deficiencies, this comedy compares favorably with other series of comedies.

Not to be outdone by a neighboring town, Bloom Center advertises for a municipal trained nurse. Mrs. Perkins, the pretty wife of the owner of a patent medicine called "Perkins' Pep Producer," answers the advertisement. All the male members of the little hamlet at once contract sickness, so that they may be treated by the attractive nurse.

When Perkins comes to town, the nurse passes a bottle of whiskey to the inhabitants, claiming it to be a sample of the Pep Producer. All the men buy bottles of the medicine, but when they discover the fraud, and the fact that the nurse is already married, they mob Perkins, and he barely gets out of town alive.

BROADWAY FILM COMPANY OFFERS 30,000 FEET OF WAR PICTURES

THE interest with which pictures from the war fronts of Europe are received by the public is demonstrated by the crowds that flock to the theatres showing war films.

The Broadway Film Company has received 30,000 feet of negative film direct from the general staff of the several armies engaged in the European conflict, and guarantees that every inch of film sold is authentic.

The films include a large number of scenes that give an insight into the every day life and mental attitude of the monarchs of the warring nations, as well as battle scenes in northern France, Galicia, Germany, Russia, Servia, Turkey and southern Austria.

The films tell a comprehensive history of the European war in moving picture form, showing mighty armies moving into action, artillery duels, bayonet attacks, cavalry charges, routs and retreats, sieges, burning cities, trench warfare, and all other incidents and horrors of the struggle at present convulsing Europe. They also show the daily life of hundreds of thousands of prisoners huddled away in detention camps.

"THE RED CIRCLE"

(Pathé—First Episode)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THE man who gets away to a fine start at the crack of the pistol, stands a fine chance of leading all the way through and eventually winning the race. So it is with a serial. If it has a snappy, sharp opening, a real introduction, not a mere preface, it is liable to gather strength and interest with its progress.

"The Red Circle" commences excellently. It proceeds immediately after the preliminary entrances of the characters to delve into an exciting story of criminals and a detective. And in its last scenes there lies a tremendous punch, a glimmering forecast of future excitement, an inkling of thrilling situations to come in the following instalments.

Having shot his bolt to such dizzy heights in the first chapter, one might expect an ordinary author to slump in constructing those to follow. But, and emphasis can be laid on the but, Will M. Ritchey is not an ordinary author. In fact he is a most competent writer of original scenarios. So it will be a surprise indeed if Ritchey's bolt does anything less than sail on at the same level.

As for Ruth Roland, the star; we quote from some anonymous philosopher, "She that is born a beauty is half married." The line might be rendered applicable to continued pictures by reading, "A serial born with a beauty is half successful." Ruth is quite the fascinating embodiment of feminine pulchritude and her presence in Ritchey's scenario forms a fifty-fifty combination that looms formidably against all others.

Opposite delightful Ruth, there is Frank Mayo, a live detective. The supporting cast seen in this number adequately arises to an occasion that is presented.

Special mention should be made of the gentleman who plays "Circle" Jim Borden, the old crook.

A synopsis of the first two reel episode, "Nevermore," follows. "Circle" Jim Borden, oldest of a long line of criminals, having served a prison term, is released. He encounters June Travis, a young girl anxious to assist ex-convicts, but spurns her help.

Borden's son attempts a theft. Max Lamar, a detective follows him to his father's den. The old man, ashamed of his son and tired of forever fleeing the law, has turned the gas on in the boy's room, and when the detective arrives he is ready to fight to the finish.

The detective wins out, but before the old jailbird dies, he tells his conqueror that if any members of the Borden family survive him, a red circle will appear on his or her hand. At the moment of Borden's death June is possessed of a weird sensation.

Later when the detective is standing by an automobile he sees a woman's hand on the side of the car. Slowly, on the back of the hand a red circle appears and then the car dashes away.

The direction of "The Red Circle" is in charge of Sherwood MacDonald, and in "Nevermore" he has amply demonstrated his ability to produce a good story in an equally good manner. The photography, too is very good.

"THE MAKING OVER OF GEOFFREY MANNING"

(Vitagraph Broadway Star Feature—Four Reels)

REVIEWED BY OSCAR COOPER

HARRY MOREY plays the lead in this substantial story of the reformation of an idle young man of millions. The plot is well constructed, entertaining, and free from the commonplaces usually found in pictures of the sort. Charles T. Dazey and William Addison Lathrop are the authors.

One of the notable things about the story is the absence of a villain. Another is the omission of scenes of riotous living through which rich young men are generally conducted (in pictures) before they are permitted to reform. Careful selection of dramatic material is evidenced also in other points of the story.

The result is straightforward, natural action with plenty of human interest, and no exaggerations whatever, acted by a cast of Vitagraph favorites, thoroughly conversant with what can be done successfully upon the screen and what cannot be done. Besides Morey, there are L. Rogers Lytton, Belle Bruce, Ned Finley, Logan Paul, Kate Davenport, Jack Brawn, Marion Henry, Eulalie Jensen, and Tom Mills. Their work is everywhere good, and the acting of Morey, Lytton, and Miss Bruce is superior to that of many widely advertised and much heralded "stars."

Harry Davenport, the director, staged a well managed factory fire scene and otherwise gave the story the settings it needed. He also did some good work with extras in views of an incipient labor riot.

GEOFFREY'S MAKING OVER COMPLETED

In short, the picture is a living witness of what can be accomplished by the application of common sense in direction, acting and authorship to a theme old, but always interesting because of its human qualities.

"MAX HITS THE HIGH SPOTS"

(Pathé—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

EVERY actor who calls himself a comedian delights in essaying the role of the jolly drunk and nine out of ten players fail in making the role comical. Max Linder, he of the French Pathé forces, can play the staggering inebriate to practically humorous perfection, suppressing totally the tiresome and disgusting side of such a character and bringing out its funny traits in fine style.

Through almost two thousand feet Max reels about the streets of Paris accompanied by his uncle, who is in hardly a better state of equilibrium. Max is clad in a coat and hat much too large for him and his shoes keep dropping off, to his great discomfort. He is continually hopping about the streets more like a mechanical jumping-jack than a human being, with results that are laughable.

Then Max and his uncle purchase a taxi and dash about the streets in a reckless way endangering the peace and quiet of the early morning pedestrians. Max Linder makes it all enjoyably funny, what with his eccentric mannerisms and weird expressions.

But "Max Hits the High Spots" has an interesting story besides. It opens with Max, very much the bashful beaux, who practices on his cook and another servant before he attempts to propose to the girl of his uncle's selection. But its no use. Max makes a mess of the entire proceedings and he is then taken out by his uncle to taste a bit of high life, with the results related above.

"I'M GLAD MY BOY GREW UP TO BE A SOLDIER"

(Selig Red Seal—V-L-S-E—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY OSCAR COOPER

THIS picture plays upon one of the best defined and most powerful of human emotion—mother-love, and one of its corollaries—which is also as old as humanity itself—woman's opposition to war.

Because of its subject it is certain to have very wide appeal. It is also timely, in these days when America is rapidly being divided into two classes: those who believe in military preparedness, and those who believe in Ford.

The people who see this picture will remember longest the impressive, restrained, satisfying acting of Eugenie Besserer. She has created a character which is a genuine ornament to the screen. As the wife whose husband dies in battle, and then as the mother whose son, seventeen years later, is also sacrificed on the battlefield, Miss Besserer shows an unusual understanding of a difficult role. She expresses, as few actresses have the knowledge or the facial gifts to express, a woman's fear, devotion, resignation, and finally pride in the heroism of her men.

Guy Oliver, as the faithful friend of both husband and son, is perfectly cast. Harry Mestayer, the "boy who grew up to be a soldier," is good, although his acting does not carry the emotional appeal conveyed by that of Oliver and Miss Besserer. Harry De Vere and Anna Luther, the other principals, are entirely acceptable.

In the battle scenes a relatively small number of men are employed with considerable skill. Without offering extraordinary effects, these scenes are adequate to the story. There are also the requisite views of recruiting stations, soldiers on the march, camps, and a Red Cross tent.

An effective ending is provided in this way: as the mother sits grief-stricken in her cottage, there comes to her a vision of a battleship firing a broadside, which dissolves into a harvesting machine at work, signifying peace and industry.

The picture as a whole is not an argument against war or against preparedness. It is just the opposite. But it also shows the suffering and grief that war inevitably brings. Its total effect upon the spectator will operate to make him a believer in national defense, if only to avert the suffering that unpreparedness certainly entails. For this reason, it is both a good picture and a timely warning, and it is good enough to stand on its own merits, unsupported by the fugitive popularity of a certain song hit.

"THE INNER CHAMBER"

(Lubin—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE INNER CHAMBER" is unlike the general run of three-reel subjects in that its first climax arrives at the middle of the second reel and sets one wondering as to whether he read "three-reel" instead of "two-reel" on the leader. However, the film itself dispels all such doubts when after its first climax it launches forth on another plot, which terminates in another climax of power equal to the first.

In this respect "The Inner Chamber" may be poor in a strict dramatic sense. A denouement which forecasts a finale is not considered in good taste when its appearance is premature, but taken as a whole this offering of Lubin's can vie for the spectators' interest with the most dramatically correct of its fellow three reelers. The action lags a little bit after the first climax, and just before the second, but for all that "The Inner Chamber" is a strong picture.

Julian Louis Lamothe and Maude Thomas, the authors, have otherwise constructed their scenario in a commendable manner. Both of their separate stories lead up to their climaxes in a way that results in a strong measure of suspense. Particularly is this so in the case of the latter plot. The climax hinges on a conventional situation, but it is so handled that its fullest possibilities have been realized.

The success of "The Inner Chamber" depends in no small measure upon the excellent acting of Melvin Mayo, the heavy. In many scenes Mayo is called upon to portray the pitiable sufferings of a drug fiend. Mayo always convinces by a sincere and realistic interpretation of his part.

The rest of the cast is likewise effective. Helen Eddy, a shining young star, has several difficult bits to handle in her part of Marian Day, at first the young social bud and later the loving wife. In all of her scenes she acts with noticeable ability. L. C. Shumway is good as the hero, and Adda Gleason registers nicely in a sympathetic part.

The story commences with the desertion by Ralph Morgan of his wife. He goes to the city and becomes a bucket shop operator, meeting in the course of his fraudulent business Marian Day, a rich young lady who loves Guy Darwin, a struggling young reporter. Marian is fascinated by the smooth manner of Morgan and at length accepts his proposal of marriage, but at the altar the reporter bursts in with the wife and puts a stop to the affair. (Climax No. 1.)

The second part of the picture takes up the story several years later, and shows Guy and Marian married and caring for Morgan's motherless child. Morgan, in prison because of his crooked business methods, has become a dope fiend. One day he escapes and finds his way to Darwin's house.

He kidnaps the girl and locks her in the inner chamber of an old mine which is shortly to be blasted. Then he tells Darwin of his deed. He learns that she is his own child, and returns to rescue her. He succeeds, but in so doing meets death because of the blast which, incidentally, is an excellently done bit of realism. (Climax No. 2.)

RAVER USES THEATRE FRANCAISE FOR "OTHER GIRL" INTERIOR SCENES

THE Raver Film Corporation recently used the Theatre Francaise, one of New York's foremost play-houses, to film several interior scenes called for in the scenario of "The Other Girl," the Augustus Thomas stage success.

"THE DEATHLOCK"

(Mutual Masterpicture—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

FOR magnificence of photography and settings, this picture will make a record to equal. The many difficulties of winter photography have been grappled with in masterly and skillful manner, and the bugbears of halation and static have been all but eliminated.

The work must have been beset by immense hardships and problems, as most of the pictures were made amid the mighty snows of the Klondike. There are impressive stretches of snow-clad mountains, valleys and plains, dog sledges scurrying about amid gigantic pine trees, and beautiful cloud and snow effects, aided greatly by the use of ray screens and orthocromatic films.

DIXIE HEARS OF HER HUSBAND'S DEATH

The story revolves around the use of the Apache death-lock, a method of fastening a victim's legs about a small tree so that there is no escape. Dal Daroux, a gambler, with his adopted daughter, Nell, is preying on the newcomers to the Klondike. He fastens upon Ford Worthing, a young man who is on a prospecting expedition, and in a card game on the steamer cheats him out of his bank roll, the girl aiding. Later Worthing traps the gambler, and gets his money back. Daroux plans to kill the young man, but Nell, who has fallen in love with him, saves him twice.

Then Daroux and a confederate, who have heard of a rich claim left to a young widow, attempt to jump it. Worthing hears of their attempt, and follows them off into the snows. Nell also follows in an attempt to prevent the disaster she knows will follow.

Daroux and his assistant overcome Worthing, and fasten him in the deathlock. Daroux then kills his associate, and starts back. He is overcome by snow madness, and falls to abusing his dogs until one of them, enraged, leaps upon him and kills him. Nell reaches Worthing, and saves him. One of the best effects ever screened is the beacon torch prepared by Nell to send a signal out over the glittering wastes of snow.

The dogs used in several of the snow scenes are said to be the malamutes which won the Alaska sweepstakes in 1914. They are effectively handled, and are a great factor in the beauty of the film. Fred J. Butler, Wilma Wilkie, David W. Butler, Patrick Dempsey and Graham Pettie head the cast.

"THE SIREN'S SONG"

(Shubert-World Film—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

MELODRAMA is the material of "The Siren's Song." Thrills there are in considerable abundance, such as the demolishment of a bucket shop by enraged stockholders, a fight on the deck of a ship followed by a dizzy fall into the water, and another hand to hand encounter enacted on dry ground.

The story is good, save that as produced it moves somewhat unevenly owing to the unusually large number of principals. Three major plot threads are responsible for the size of the cast, but the picture never confuses because of them.

The direction is hardly up to the highest mark of previous Shubert offerings. As regards realistic atmosphere it is good, but even continuity has not been obtained, owing to the fact that in many instances the director has printed a spoken sentence across a scene. To do so he has resorted to the double exposure, which is not exceptionally well done. Likewise has the director dissolved his closeups and full scenes into one another, and in one instance this has resulted in a "repeat."

The cast with the exception of Charles Trowbridge and Helen Weer, the lovers, is inclined to overact. Mlle. Diane as the female heavy offends largely in this respect, while her field of expression is limited. Albert Hart, Mae Phelps, Charles Dickson, Maisie Gay and Adolph Link are cast in other major roles, and save for their tendency to overwork, acquit themselves fairly well.

The camera work is also rather mediocre in some of the scenes, although in others it is quite clear enough.

The story relates the obstacles which a reformed young man meets with when he attempts to live down his past. He is highly successful finally but his arch enemies, his former employer, a bucket shop operator and his female companion are forever popping up in his way, with resulting excitement.

"The Siren's Song" is of note chiefly because of its melodramatic thrills, which though they do not entirely elevate the picture, create a strong measure of sensationalism that will be appreciated by the lovers of it.

CUMMINGS, STAR OF "DIAMOND," A GUEST OF HONOR IN LOUISVILLE

IRVING CUMMINGS, star in "The Diamond from the Sky," was a visitor in Louisville last week. He was the guest at an informal dinner given by the management of the Broadway Amusement Company at the Henry Watterson Hotel.

Those present included Mr. Cummings, his secretary, Mr. Glasser; Fred J. Dolle, manager of the Alamo theatre; Joseph L. Steurele, manager of the Walnut theatre; Louis Steurele, manager of the East Broadway theatre, and Charles N. Koch.

"JANE"

(Moiosco-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM RESSMAN ANDREWS

THIS picture, founded on the play by W. H. Lestocque and put on at the Tremont theatre, Boston, in the nineties by Charles Frohman, and later making a record run at the Madison Square theatre in New York, is destined to have a long run as a screen comedy.

With Charlotte Greenwood and Sydney Grant in the chief roles, the production has all the delightful touches the play became noted for when Charles Hawtrey was seen in the part of Shackelton, Lottie Venne played Jane, and Charles Brookfield made a hit as William, in London, at the Comedy theatre, December 18, 1890.

The director has managed to get all out of the sidesplitting incidents of the original piece. And further he has shown an adroitness in putting in touches from time to time which were only hinted at in the one play of the season which was the only formidable competitor for public favor with "Charley's Aunt," a farce which had such a tremendous run in New York City.

THE BLUFF WORKS

The fun in the story centres around a young man who had to produce a wife by a certain time. The hero is at his wits' end to meet the requirements. The desperate hero hits upon the expedient of having Jane, a housemaid, pose as his wife.

The plan works out well enough until the butler, who is in love with the girl, imagines that the lovemaking is real.

Charlotte Greenwood plays Jane with a complete understanding of the points in the girl's character to be accentuated. Sydney Grant makes William a man to be reckoned with by the other personages in the story. Lucy Norton gives Myrtle Stedman a chance to show another side to her versatility. Herbert Standing as Andrew Kershaw is capable. Howard Davies made Col. Norton a person of flesh and blood. Lydia Yeamans Titus was excellent as Mrs. Chadwick, and Syd De Grey in the role of Henry Jardine acquitted himself with credit.

Frank Lloyd's direction of the subject has given the picture distinctive qualities. "Jane" is a veritable laugh provoker and ought to please the most exacting motion picture goers.

"VIRTUE"

(Franklin Film Co.—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

THE noble objects of teaching great moral lessons, "saving young girls" and presenting exhaustive studies of sociological conditions, have been used in the past as reasons for putting out films which violated certain puritanical precepts of the police. This film is advanced as one of these "moral lessons." Just what its lesson is is hard to grasp; in reality it is as harmless as a charlotte russe, and if it has any message for young girls, it must be: "Never allow well-dressed city men to chloroform you."

It cannot be denied that there is a large public which likes to be entertained in constant expectation that the police will descend on the place, and the "moral lesson" which is used as a disguise in this case, is a direct appeal to this class—only they are apt to be disappointed.

"Virtue" is the story of a farmer's daughter, living a quiet, pastoral life with her aged father, and with an attentive sweetheart hovering nearby. A rich city man enters the scene, when he is injured in an automobile accident, and is carried to the farm.

After his recovery he writes back to a friend about the girl, remarking that she "lacks education, and would be out of place in our set." The girl sees the letter and decides to get the education. She induces her father to send her to a seminary, and there she figures as a heroine, by rescuing several schoolmates from a burning dormitory.

The city man reads of her exploit; it calls her back to his mind, and he decides he must have her at all costs. So he orders up his closed automobile, takes a small phial of chloroform, and goes to the seminary after her. Walking with her on the campus, he leads her toward the auto, and there he and the chauffeur chloroform her and carry her away to the city.

In the city the girl arouses the jealousy of the city man's mistress, and she starts trouble. In a hand to hand fight the villain gets rid of the older woman, and then introduces the farmer's daughter into his gay revels—she all unwilling. Her country sweetheart succeeds in tracing her, and rescues her just as the revels reach their height.

These revels, practically the only scene where "virtue" figures as anything except its own reward, do not occur, of course, until after the abduction, and the abduction happens in the fourth reel. There are a number of attractive scenes in the first three parts, such as farm activities, a pillow fight in the seminary, a cross-country race by the girls, and so on, and the most diligent seeker after the prurient will find nothing to his desire.

The only violation is of certain canons of good taste, and by cutting out about four feet of the banquet scene there would be nothing that is not to be seen every night in the restaurants where our best people go to get intoxicated.

May Ward has the leading role, that of the farmer's daughter; W. M. Girard is the farmer, Edward Tilton the villain, Dorothy Rogers the other woman, and Dinah Smith a comedy servant.

"HIS TURNING POINT"

(Big A-Associated—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

A THEME of wide appeal has been worked out in conscientious and striking manner, although the methods used are not always perfectly logical. There are elaborate and tasteful settings and striking exterior views, and, moreover, there is action which is not allowed to lag.

The story is built around a child. A three-year-old girl, of the type which is always appealing, and will reach the sympathy of every spectator, has been used, and the director has shown rare discretion in selecting an especially winsome specimen of childhood. There are numerous touches of nature in the nursery, and in fact in all the activities of the little one, which greatly enhance the picture.

The reformation of a young man who has fallen among evil companions and into evil ways, is the theme. He enters the house of a noted engineer to steal the plans of a valuable invention, but finds the engineer's wife is his own sister. He abandons his attempt at burglary, but the husband, returning, he flees, and is captured on the lawn. Another attempt is made by the band to steal the documents, and this is successful.

When the wife's brother is released from prison, he determines to make restitution to the engineer, and he recovers the documents from the gang leader, and leaves them on their owner's desk, where they are found, and create a great mystery. In a final attempt to regain the papers, the gang decides to kidnap the child. This is done, but the wife's brother rescues the little one and returns her to her home. Through the influence of the little girl his reformation is complete. The engineer gets him a good position in South America, and he takes it on condition that he never set foot in the United States again.

The photography leaves something to be desired, chiefly through overlighting of interiors, and a too-wide diaphragm, which has resulted in halation from clothing, draperies and, in some cases, even from faces. Andrew Rogers, Leatrice Zeidler and Micheline Ragep head the cast.

"A PRICE FOR FOLLY"

(Vitagraph Blue Ribbon—V-L-S-E—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM RESSMAN ANDREWS

IN "A Price for Folly" Edith Storey is featured as a mercenary opera dancer with the fatal gift of enthrallment over susceptible and wealthy men, young and old, whose pocketbooks, responding with a breathless frequency to her Midas touch, become the sources of dazzling jewelry for the actress' dainty person.

Mlle. Dorothea Jardeau, as she is known, fascinates a youth, played by Antonio Moreno with a gusto indicating a sympathetic conception of the role, Jean de Segni, who has a great deal of money and is free from the handicap of regular hours in business or professional life that might prevent him from spending it with a lavish hand.

The father of the youth, the Duke de Segni, tries for some time to keep from the boy's mother all knowledge of the foolhardy course of their son. In her ignorance of the wild, dissipated life of the young man, she imagines him a model for all other sons in the world to copy to please their mothers. Louis Beaudet played the part of the Duchess de Segni with all the air of the "grand dame" required by the necessities of the role.

JEAN ACCUSES MLLE. JARDEAU

The extravagances of the heir of the house bring his fortunes to a low ebb, and the luxurious dancer, unhappy unless able to gratify every selfish whim, casts him off for a man who, though much older, is capable of condoning the offense of age by gallantly offering her the use of a fortune almost large enough to pay off some of the national debt of France. With a conviction that the national debt could take care of itself, as she had to look to her own welfare, she proceeds to make the flattered admirer, Henri Langdon, played by Harry Morey with considerable animation, especially in the duel scene, suppose that she had never seen a more likable man in all the rounds of her gay life.

Most of the story of "A Price for Folly" is told in the form of a dream. Jean de Segni falls asleep on a couch in the drawing room at home and imagines that his father, made desperate by his son's excesses and total disregard for the honor of the family, kills the duchess and then attempts to commit suicide.

This action leads to complications involving Jean in a charge of murdering his parents. He is cleared, however, by his father on regaining consciousness, confessing the deed. Jean's friends suppose the young man guilty and that his father shouldered all the blame to save the erring son. A duel follows as a result of the sneers from Langdon at the club. Jean is killed in the duel.

On waking Jean takes warning from the dream, and decides to mend his ways.

While numerous scenes show a desire from the director to impart animation to the incidents, the action does not always move with the swiftness apparently demanded by the plot. Many of the flash-backs are too long, and if cut somewhat would give the story more cohesion.

"THE CHEAT"

(Lasky-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM RESSMAN ANDREWS

FANNY WARD brings a full measure of talent to "The Cheat," and makes the role of Edith Hardy, the thoughtless, social butterfly whose extravagances and impulsive conduct lead to grave family crises, one of the most impressive screen impersonations seen in some time.

There has been no skimping in cutting the dramatic cloth of "The Cheat"; it permits full width to one's enjoyment of a story well told, for its quality, like an all-wool garment, makes the picture as distinctive from a patched and shoddy subject as the difference between a coat made by a Fifth avenue tailor and a take-me-home-for-ten-dollars-before-the-fire-sale-ends.

Director de Mille has produced a picture free from gross technical faults—there is not a foot of superfluous film in all the five reels; there is no unnecessary scene; no prolongation of important ones; no endless repetition of early parts of the story when a character has occasion to refer to previous events.

The director assumed in the possession of the spectator an imagination sufficiently strong to see the connection between present and past events from the pantomime allusions of the players. An instance of this lack of padding, the temptation of inferior directors, is the courtroom scene.

The tearful wife in order to convince the court of her husband's innocence gives a detailed recital of her experience at the hands of the wounded man in his house in the "smart set" colony on Long Island. The audience was spared the repetition of several hundred feet of film showing them what they knew already—there was not even a short flash back.

EDITH PLEADS WITH TORI

The whole story moved with a crescendo of dramatic purpose, culminating in a tense climax corresponding to the third act of a well-constructed stage play. Hector Trunbull, former critic of the New York Tribune, who is responsible for the scenario, did his work with an instinctive grasp of the principles of photoplaywright construction.

Jack Dean as the stock broker husband was excellent, and Sussue Hayakawa in the role of Tori, the wealthy oriental who seeks to make himself indispensable to the pleasure-loving wife in her monetary difficulties, gives a realistic presentation.

James Neil, a finished actor whose work always attracts attention even in a "bit," was compelled to waste good acting material on a small part.

"THE MILL ON THE FLOSS"

(Thanhouser-Mutual Masterpicture—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

A PRETTY and dramatic pastoral has been built on George Eliot's famous old novel by Philip Lonergan. Excellent locations have been found for the exterior scenes—and the picture is largely exteriors, and there is more atmosphere in the subject than is usual in such pictures. The atmosphere is all of a style which will appeal to picture-goers in this country, and that, in combination with the fact that everybody knows the "Mill on the Floss" ought to make the picture valuable as a drawing feature.

Mignon Anderson does some excellent work as Maggie, the miller's daughter, and she is ably supported by the character work of W. Eugene Moore, as the miller, and Arthur Bauer as the lawyer. Harris Gordon, George Marlo and Boyd Marshall furnish some convincing juvenile work—in fact, the whole piece is well cast, and produced with an eye to logic and sequence.

HER BROTHER'S SCORN

The story begins with scenes at the old mill, the great wheel turning, and the miller and his family happy in the possession of each other, and their work. The action is slow in getting started, and the plot does not really begin to unfold itself until two reels have been run off. There has also been a little haste in the building up of situations, which in some cases leaves them poorly founded and not always reasonable.

The tale is too well known to need repeating. Maggie, the daughter, torn between her love for two men, and scorned by her brother, vindicates herself in the eyes of all, by rowing to her brother's rescue when a flood traps him in the old mill. Both are caught in the torrent, and their bodies are found later, linked together, and their childhood friendship restored in death. These scenes have been well created and photographed. A high type of photography has done much to help the picture, and there are a number of scenes of real beauty.

Fannie Hoyt and Leo Wirth are also in the cast.

ROSKAM AGAIN GENERAL MANAGER OF THE COMMERCIAL COMPANY LABORATORIES

EDWARD M. ROSKAM is again general manager of the Commercial Motion Picture Laboratories at Grantwood, New Jersey.

Backed up by Mr. Roskam's ten years of practical knowledge and experience, the work that the Commercial turn out should be as nearly perfect as modern improvements, machinery and a perfect organization can make them.

Charles Kipper has been appointed superintendent of the laboratory and is without a doubt one of the most capable technical film men in the business. Mr. Kipper has had seven years of experience in every department in a motion picture factory. Before joining the Commercial, Mr. Kipper was employed by the New York Motion Picture Company, Reliance Film Company and the Eclair Company.

He is conceded to be one of the best judges of timing negatives and positives in the industry. With his perfect negative, positive tinting and toning formulas the Commercial printing should be practically flawless.

In their tittle department titles can be set up, photographed and delivered on the same day the orders are received.

The Commercial has no affiliation with any distributing organization or program and every order will be finished in the regular rotation and each will receive the same careful attention, regardless of quantity or length.

UNIVERSAL CAMERA COMPANY ESTABLISHES EMPLOYMENT BUREAU TO "GET SQUARE PLUGS OUT OF ROUND HOLES"

THE Universal Camera Company has established an employment bureau for camera men.

The object of the company is not to push men from pillar to post, nor to inconvenience employers by removing satisfactory help just when they have begun to be useful, but rather to get the square plugs out of the round holes by taking men from positions where they are not giving the best of satisfaction, and to put them into jobs where they can make good, and also finding better opportunities for men of ambition, so that they can more speedily climb to the top.

The company has a large number of applicants on its list, and has to date been able to place a number of them in very desirable positions. The producing companies also find this service a great convenience, as every applicant is thoroughly investigated and the information is given to them in concise form.

The fact that no charge is made to either employe or employer does not indicate that the service is not thorough.

GENERAL FILM PROGRAM

"The Failure." (Biograph. Mon., Dec. 20.)—This is one of [illegible] Dorothy Bernard, Wilfred Lucas, Lily Cahill, Donald Crisp and Edwin August appear. A clerk, discharged for drinking, drifts aimlessly, and finally becomes a singer at a low dance hall. There he meets a woman of the underworld, who pleads with him to "straighten up."

He fails to make any improvement, until an uncle offers him a farm on condition that he marry and settle down. He cannot accept, as he has no money for railroad fare. The girl pawns her trinkets to raise the money, but he refuses to accept it, until he is led to think the proprietor of the place is making him a loan of the amount.

He seeks his former sweetheart, but is too late. Then he returns and marries the girl of the dance hall.

"Packer Jim's Guardianship." (Biograph. Two reels. Tues., Dec. 21.)—A thrilling "western" in which Packer Jim, a newcomer in the locality, rescues the little daughter of Bill Pape from the Indians. Bill Pape dies, after consigning the girl to Jim's guardianship.

Claim jumpers seize the Pape property, and Jim finds he has no recourse in law, so he gallops to the claim agent just as the jumpers are setting fire to the cabin. He shoots two of them and the third flees, leaving him free to reclaim the property for the child. Ivan Christy, Zoe Beech, W. C. Robinson and Robert Nolan head the cast.

"The Tides of Retribution." (Biograph. Three reels. Wed., Dec. 22.)—A thrilling story of a woman's revenge. Larkin, an unscrupulous young man, steals Carpenter's invention, and in doing so causes an explosion which leaves Carpenter's young wife blind. Larkin disappears.

Later he meets Virginia Shirley, woos her and breaks her heart. Years afterward, Virginia, a famous singer, is returning from Europe. On the same boat are Carpenter and his wife, who have been in Europe in a vain attempt to have the wife's sight restored, and Larkin, who has made a fortune from Carpenter's invention. He does not recognize Virginia, and she plies him with wine, lures him into her stateroom, finds Carpenter's original plans, and there brings the two men face to face. In terror, Larkin signs a confession which restores to Carpenter the fortune which his invention has earned. In the cast are Jack Mulhall, Vera Sisson, G. Raymond Nye, Gretchen Hatrman, Edward Cecil and Kate Bruce.

"The Blade o' Grass." (Edison. Three reels. Fri., Dec. 24.)—In this subject is presented a strong story, in a setting of beauty. Deserted by his wife, John Ward gives up his magnificent home and takes his little daughter out to live in the remote woods. There she grows up a real child of the forest.

Ward's sister writes to him, telling him he has no right to keep the child secluded, and deny her the fullness of life, and he sends her to the city for a "polish." There she meets Winthrop, a wealthy New Yorker, and the two fall in love. But city ways are not for Dorothy, and she comes back to the cabin.

Winthrop follows her, greatly against Ward's desires, and he is obliged to keep away from the cabin. The city man, however, wins his way [illegible] art by rescuing Dorothy from a [illegible]dsman. Ward relents, and the two are married. The cast includes Leonie Flugrawth, Pat O'Malley, Charles Sutton, Mabel Dwight, Mrs. Wallace Erskine, Grace Morrison, Guido Colucci, T. Tamamoto and Joe Bingham.

"The Danger of Being Lonesome." (Essanay. Two reels. Tues., Dec. 21.)—Not shown for review.

"Canimated News," No. 3. (Essanay. Split reel, with scenic. Wed., Dec. [illegible] for review.

"The Woman With a Rose." (Essanay. Three reels. Sat., Dec. 25.)—Not shown for review; the story follows: Adele Clinton poses for a picture for her husband, who is an artist. The picture is exhibited and called "The Woman With a Rose." This picture attracts the attention of Lechison, who covets the model, and Czerny, a musician, who admires the picture as a work of art.

Lechison rents a studio and asks Adele to pose for him. To help support her penniless husband, Adele consents. When she goes to the studio she discovers what Lechison wants. She screams, and Czerny enters and shoots the man.

Adele is accused of the murder, but her husband confesses that he was the slayer. He is about to be executed, when Czerny confesses that he was the guilty one.

In the cast are Lillian Drew, Frank Dayton, Ernest Maupain, Frank Malatesta, and Hugh Thompson.

"The Bandits of Macaroni Mountains." (Kalem. Tues., Dec. 21.)—In costume comedies, Bud Duncan appears to even better advantage than in the regular type. In this subject he appears as an Italian bandit, who uses Concha, his fair confederate, to ensnare an American millionaire, and bring him to the mountain lair. Concha, however, develops a fondness for the millionaire, and assists in his escape—not only from the bandits but from his masterful wife.

The bandits then capture the wife, and in demanding her ransom are answered by a hearty request to keep her. Bud and his band then find it impossible to get rid of her, but they are delivered when, in cleaning up their cave, she discharges a mine of dynamite, and blows herself back to civilization, landing on a bench beside her husband. Ethel Teare, Jack McDermott and Myrta Sterling are also in the cast.

"A Bushranger at Bay." (Kalem. Two reels. Wed., Dec. 22.)—This episode of the Stingaree series has more dramatic value than most of its predecessors, and is cleverly arranged. Kentish, an English traveler, recognizes Stingaree from a photograph in the possession of Ethel, who is secretly in love with the bushranger, as a clubman he knew in London.

Soon afterward Stingaree holds up the coach on which the Englishman is traveling and takes the mails. After he departs Kentish announces that he is going single-handed and unarmed to recover the mails. He writes a note, which he sends to the police, with instructions to open it only if he fails to return by eight o'clock.

He finds Stingaree and demands the mails, but the highwayman jeers at him until he convinces Stingaree that his identity is known, and will be public property unless Kentish is back by eight o'clock. Stingaree gives up the mails, and fur[illegible] [illegible] civilization. True Boardman, Marin Sais and Thomas Lingham head the cast.

"The Oriental's Plot." (Kalem. Fri., Dec. 24.)—A treasure is discovered when Marguerite, in this newest venture, solves a deep mystery. The girl rescues a young Hindu girl who is held captive by a curio dealer of her own race, and finds that she had been held because she knew of the hiding place of a great treasure.

The Hindu attempts to recapture her, and in so doing fastens his toils on Marguerite and Bob, the sweetheart. The police are notified through a ruse by Marguerite, and they rescue the captives. Then Marguerite discovers the clue to the treasure cleverly concealed in an old painting. Marguerite Courtot, Richard Purdon, Bradley Barker, A. Lever, Eleanor Lewis and Lois Howell compose the cast.

"A Boy [illegible] 25.)—An [illegible] Hazard of Helen. [illegible] climbs into the cab of a det[illegible] starts it down the track. He is unable to stop it, and the engine is running wild against an approaching passenger train.

"The Great Detective." (Lubin. Tues., Dec. 14.)—A comedy featuring David L. Don, that is not up to the mark of his recent productions, as the story moves slowly and being conventional in incident, it tires toward the end.

"The Inner Chamber." (Lubin. Three reels. Wed., Dec. 15.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"A Thief in the Night." (Lubin. Two reels. Thurs., Dec. 16.)—A very good picture, ultimately, in which practically all the space is devoted to the husb[illegible] attempts to force his wife to betray [illegible] at a strange man, found in the hous[illegible] over. away with it." Octavia Handworth and Rosetta Brice have the principal parts.

"An Unwilling Burglar." (Lubin. Sat., Dec. 18.)—Here is a Billie Reeves comedy, with a wealth of humorous situations, a good story and fitting interpretation on the part of Reeves and his entire support, consisting of Carrie Reynolds, Ferd O'Beck, Jessie Terry, Adelaide Hayes and Frank Smiley. Mark Swan is the author.

"Perkins' Pep Producer." (Selig. Two reels. Mon., Dec. 20.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"Harney Merwin's Adventure." (Selig. Tues., Dec. 21.—With the exception of an unusually strenuous fight, there is no rough work in this snappy comedy. The trio of leads, consisting of William Stowell, Edwin Wallock, and Marion Warner is quite acceptable.

Hartney Merwin, disgusted with life's conventionality, bets with some of his club friends that there is no adventure to be found in modern life. Hal Dart, Merwin's chum, plots with his sister Grace to give the blase man the adventure he seeks. Grace leads Merwin to a shack, where her brother and his friends are disguised as counterfeiters. Merwin beats up the whole crowd, and takes Grace to the nearest minister, by whom they are married.

Merwin pays the bet, but considers it worth while, since he has acquired a charming wife.

"The Sacred Tiger of Agra." (Selig. Sat., Dec. 25.)—The ending of this Jungle-Zoo drama is not very satisfactory, and the story is the reverse of complex. In the cast are Vivian Reed, Edward Piel, C. C. Holland, and M. Von Harder.

When Dr. Harris dies, his daughter Jennie is left unprotected in the interior of India. A native rajah makes odious advances, and her servant Omah advises her to flee into the jungle. This she does, and she comes upon the Sacred Tiger of Agra, an animal that is worshipped by the natives.

The wild beast has just escaped from captivity. and the rajah and his party, in searching for the animal, meet Jennie. The prince is about to violate the girl, when she promises to tell him the whereabouts of the tiger if he will conduct her safely back to the settlement.

This he promises to do, and she points out the tiger, prostrate on the ground from the effects of the drug she had given it.

"The Thirteenth Girl." (Vitagraph Broadway Star Feature. Three reels. Sat., Dec. 25.)—This story of a girl of the sweatshops, who becomes a fashion model and then the mistress of her employer, thus saving her family from want, is elaborately produced, and well acted by Arline Pretty, Julia Swayne Gordon, Lillian Burns, Robert Whitworth, Arthur Cozine, and Frank Currier. Handsome gowns are displayed, and the heroine (Arline Pretty) wears scanty lingerie in two scenes. The plot, an adaptation of a magazine story by Frances Aymar Mathews, is only fair. Theodore Marston directed.

MUTUAL PROGRAM

"The Book Agent." (Novelty. Mon., Dec. 13.)—A fast comedy, centered about the hustling qualities of a book agent, who is disliked by the business man on whom he has fixed his attention, but is popular with the girls in the office. The victim rigs up a water spout to drench the agent the next time he calls, but the girls tell him of it, and he comes with an umbrella.

Then the victim rigs up a box trap, and the agent is caught, boxed up, thrown into the river, and sent over the falls. The box is spied by a picnic party, hauled uot and opened, and the agent sells half a dozen copies of his book before he even gets out of his prison.

"Seeing America First." (Gaumont. Split reel. Tues., Dec. 14.)—An interesting trip is taken through the Pittsburgh steel mills, and the Mutual Traveller shows the marvellous process of forging and cutting steel and the manufacture of steel girders. There are also birds' eye views of Pittsburgh, the vicinity, and the famous horseshoe curve. On the same reel, is "Keeping Up with the Joneses," in which Pa McGinnis demonstrates the futility of buying a real "classy" hat.

"The Arab's Vengeance." (Centaur. Two reels. Thurs.. Dec. 16.)—The Bostock animals have been used to good advantage in this tale of the desert. Carol Calvin arrives at a military outpost in company with her father, and a mutual attraction springs up between her and Captain Vincent, commandant of the post. A native, who has a grudge against Vincent, kidnaps Carol and conspires to sell her into slavery in the interior. A pursuit is started.

A native fails to find the elephant on which he depended to carry him through to his companions, and tying Carol in a hut, goes in search of the animal. He is killed by a lion. The pursuers find Carol, unconscious in the hut, with a great lion about to spring on her. The lion is killed by a bullet, and the girl rescued. Roy Watson, John Oaker, Thomas Morrissey, Margaret Gibson, Dave Allan and B. Singh compose the cast.

"In the Sunset Country." (Mustang. Two reels. Fri., Dec. 17.)—This is a rambling, not always coherent, Western drama featuring E. Forrest Taylor and Nell Franzen. While not in any way unusual, it is a fair Western subject. Lizette Thorne and Warren Ellsworth complete the cast.

Madge, a dance-hall girl, tires of Mark Henley, the proprietor of the saloon. She runs away, but is overcome by sickness near the cabin of Hal Newcomb, a prospector. He takes care of her for the night, but Henley, hearing of the episode, circulates stories derogatory to Hal's character. These slanders reach the ears of Helen, the school mistress, to whom Hal is engaged. She rushes to his cabin to find out the truth, and finds Henley there alone. He kidnaps her, and carries her off into the mountains. Meantime, Madge has come upon the scene, and substitutes herself for the bound and gagged school teacher. The saloonkeeper is about to kill the gril, when help, summoned by Helen, arrives.

"Spider Barlow's Soft Spot." (American. Fri., Dec. 17.)—The chief attraction of this picture is its timeliness for Yule-tide consumption. The plot and treatment are not extraordinary, but Winnifred Greenwood, George Field, Sid Algier and George Webb furnish acting of the usual excellence expected of them.

Spider and Spike, two burglars, deplore the fact that they cannot give the poor waifs living in the tenement with them a taste of real Christmas. But Spider, inspired with a novel idea, sets out with his pal to get some toys at any cost. Dressed in Santa Claus garb, they pass policemen unmolested, and strip some rich homes of innumerable trinkets. These bring joy to the hearts of the tenement kiddies.

"The Hold Up." (Cub. Fri., Dec. 17.)—Jerry (George Ovey) figures as a busy hero in this comedy. A note to Bessie, his sweetheart, is intercepted by Mamma, who keeps the appointment herself, and uses a rolling pin on Jerry. Bessie tips Jerry off that she is being taken on an auto trip, and Jerry disguises as a bandit and waits beside the trail.

Just before he can go into action a real bandit appears and Jerry figures as a rescuer. His heroism does not mollify mamma, however, and he is obliged to flee, taking the bandit's horse for the purpose. He is overtaken by the police at a country hotel, and lodged in the old familiar cell.

"Two Hearts and a Thief." (Beauty. Fri., Dec. 18.)—This is a comedy of the usual Beauty type, its featherweight plot being made interesting by the acting of Frank Borzage and Neva Gerber, supported by Lucille Ward and Rae Berger.

Jack Nelson, a clerk in the brokerage firm of Henry Winters, is in love with his employer's daughter. He writes a letter to Neva, his sweetheart, suggesting an elopement. He unwittingly gives this letter, instead of an order from Winters to buy K. T. O. stock, to the broker's Stock Exchange representatives. When the stock takes a big slump Winters thinks he is ruined, but the mistake of the clerk has saved him from bankruptcy, and he is willing to let the blunderer marry Nev..

"Cissy's Innocent Wink." (Casino, Sun., Dec. 19.)—This is a real clever comedy, written for and about Cissy Fitzgerald. She figures as the young wife of an aged deacon. She is troubled with a nervous affliction of the eye, which results on her distributing winks around at the party, and consequently collecting a crowd of men; which subsequently the party breaks up.

When the deacon is informed that his wife is carrying on a scandalous flirtation with one of the members of the congregation, he announces that unless the man in the case calls and apologizes within twenty-four hours, there will be trouble.

When the whole male population drops in to apologize, the deacon begins to investigate; then he learns that the trouble is purely nervous. Budd Ross and Charles Craig are also in the cast.

"The Bankhurst Victory." (Reliance. Two reels. Sun., Dec 19.)—A detective story, clustering around the robbery of a famous jewel. Mason, manager of the jewelry house, conspires with Hanson, a noted criminal, to steal the jewel. Mrs. Mason hears of the plot, and protests in vain against the plan. The next morning she is found stabbed to death.

Remar, a detective, discovers that a Miss Brown, stopping at a nearby hotel, is really Hanson's wife, and after the theft of the jewel he traces it to her. He pursues her and Hanson in a taxi, and when he reaches them, he attempts a capture but is stabbed. Assistance arrives, and the pursuit is continued. They are captured, and the jewel recovered. A. D. Sears, Alfred Paget, Jack Brammell, Irene Hunt and Margie Wilson compose the cast.

"The Clean Up." (American. Two reels. Mon., Dec. 20.)—During Edward Coxen's illness, Frank Borzage plays opposite Winnifred Greenwood, and the combination is excellent. The support, consisting of George Field, Lizette Thorne, and Al Fordyce, is very good. The plot is not wholly new, but under the skillful direction of Charles Bartlett it becomes quite absorbing.

Miriam, the daughter of John Barker, a wealthy politician, is engaged to George Prescott, a young newspaper reporter. When Prescott begins to expose the gambling operations that are going on in the city, Barker demands that his newspaper articles be given up, or that he break his engagement with Miriam. Seeing that Barker is one of the gambling coterie, Prescott calls him a crook, and departs.

Thinking that Prescott no longer loves her, Miriam starts to patronize the gambling parlors herself, until her father discovers it. Staggered by his daughter's waywardness, he decides to be on the reform side, and with the help of Prescott, he cleans up the city. Miriam and Prescott are then reunited.

"Making a Man of Johnny." (Beauty. Tues., Dec. 21.)—John Steppling, John Sheehan, and Carol Halloway puts lots of pep in this simple comedy. The bathing beach scene give an excellent opportunity for the display of fetching bathing costumes..

Johnny's uncle hopes to win the hand of Carol, belle of the beach in a summer resort. When it is reported that Johnny is also to visit the watering place, his uncle tells the girls that he is a self-conscious boob. But unknown to his uncle, Johnny makes a strong bid for Carol's favor. Finally the nephew goes to his avuncular relation and asks what he should do when he is in love with a girl who is being courted by someone else. The uncle replies, "Marry her, you simp." Following this advice Johnny marries Carol, much to his uncle's disgust.

"When William's Whiskers Worked." (Falstaff. Thurs., Dec. 23.)—Riley Chamberlain is, as usual, good in this polite comedy of errors. As father of the flowing white beard, he is revered as a patriarch. He forbids his daughter's marriage to the young man of her choice but as soon as he leaves town they elope. William loses his ticket and is thrown off the train.

He telegraphs to his daughter for money, but she has gone, and the message comes back to him for collect charges. In debt he is forced to take a job as bearded lady in a side-show. Their daughter's sweetheart finds him, and by aiding in his rescue, wins favor in his sight. Winifred Lane, George Marlo, Charles Emerson, Frances Keyes, Elice Jordon and John Lehnberg are also in the cast.

"The Pitch o' Chance." (Mustang. Two reels. Fri., Dec. 24.)—The acting and directing of Frank Borzage do much to make this the best Mustang release for some time. The story is good, and the supporting cast, including Jack Richardson, Lizette Thorne, and Helene Rosson, is very happily chosen.

"Rocky" Scott, a reckless, devil-may-care roisterer, one day wins all the money of "Kentuck," a cool gambler. Scott then suggests that "Kentuck" place his common-law wife, Nan, against the pile. This is done, and Scott wins the girl and the wad.

He rides off with Nan, but hearing that the gambler, rueing his bargain, is on his trail with a gun, he returns to meet the loser. Scott's better nature asserts itself, and he asks Nan to marry him. Realizing that her own life has not been wholly above reproach, she consents. When "Kentuck" sees their true love, he does not interfere.

"Author! Author!" (Mustang. Three reels. Sat., Dec. 25.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"That Country Girl." (Beauty. Sat., Dec. 25.)—Neva Gerber, with Lucille Warde, William Carroll, and Nan Christy, lends attractiveness to this elementary story.

The country girl decides to visit her city relations, and they are horror-stricken, thinking that she will be an impossible hay-seed. When she arrives, well-dressed, pretty, and vivacious, they still look askance at her. But by discovering some gossip about each one of them she causes the haughty city folks to eat out of her hand in their eagerness to prevent a disclosure.

Turkey Trot Day celebration in Alabama; British soldiers operate catapults for hurling bombs; German prisoners in Verdun, France; captured German guns exhibited in London; Pathe's Paris fashions.

"Pathe News," No. 97. (Sat., Dec. 4.)—Prize winning Ohio farmers march through the White House grounds headed by a ladies' band; Lord Mayor of London inspects Trinidad soldiers; children receive schooling in open air in Kansas City, Mo.; "Better Babies" parade in Watts, Cal.; Gov. Ferguson of Texas confers with Carranza in Mexico; scenes relative to the war from London; King George and the Prince of Wales visit the front, North Eastern France; the King and President Poincare review allied troops; the King confers with General Joffre; "Bubbling Bill," an animated cartoon.

"Picturesque Hanoi." (Pathe. Split reel. Mon., Dec. 6.)—A pleasing scenic in photocolor showing views of this ancient, though modernized town in French Indo-China. On the same reel with "Sugar Cane Growing."

"Sugar Cane Growing." (Pathe. Split reel. Mon., Dec. 6.)—In black and white this half-reel shows the sugar industry on the Mascarne Islands lying just east of Madagascar. It is an interesting number and not over-stocked with similar scenes. On the same reel with "Picturesque Hanoi."

"A Foozle at the Tea Party." (Phunphilm. Wed., Dec. 8.)—The Rolin company has made a very funny number here, by employing a golf course as the setting for the picture. On the Links Lonesome Luke impersonates Lord Smitem, meets Letty Lotsofcoin and is getting along fairly well when the angry lord shows up. It's a wonder someone hasn't realized the comedy that lies in a golf club before, as Luke and his associates, continually wielding the sticks, cut a most comical appearance.

"Deep Dyed Dubs." (Starlght. Sat., Dec. 11.)—Heinie and Louie amuse as usual in this number, which though familiar from first to last is comical because of the eccentric comedians. Heinie poses as a statue and Louie as a Baron and take possession of the wealthy Mrs. Moore's house, until the real statue and the real Baron put in their appearances. 8he comic possibilities in this plot are thick and fast and the Starlight performers have realized all of them.

"The New Adventures of J. Rufus Wallingford." (Pathe. Two reels. No. 11.)—This number, entitled "A Stoney Deal," shows the manner in which J. Rufus attempts to swindle James Squibble out of some property. Squibble is eleventh on the list that Wallingford and Blackie Daw have to settle with.

The smooth Rufus is partially successful in his mission as he manages to get about $15,000 from Squibble, but afterwards he discovers that he could have gotten much more and consequently he is quite chagrined. There are a good many scenes in this number that bear little relation to the main plot, but on the whole "A Stoney Deal" is very humorous.

"Pathe News." No. 94 (Pathe.)—Scenes of destruction in the wake of the Tornado in the middle west; boy scouts give demonstration of drill at Jamaica, L. I.; "Christy" Mathewson practices at clay pigeon shooting at Kansas City; Dr. Haiselden, of Chicago, records his decision in the defective baby case; Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Estes start life on the "back to nature" plan in the Maine woods; body of Booker T. Washington is borne to rest at Tuskegee, Ala.; prize winners in baby show at Greenwich, Conn.; students at Chicago enliven football game by introduction of novel floats; future sailormen of British navy in drill at Wallasey, England; wreck of schooner in gale off Swampscott, Mass.; big parade of Georgia Harvest Festival at Atlanta; barges on the Seine, near Paris are fitted out to carry wounded from the front; new giant crane in Chicago shops, easily lifts 200-ton locomotive.

"Pathe News." No. 95 (Pathe.)—Cat is replaced as mascot of the fruit liner Tenadores, by a jaguar kitten; woman's peace party at New York receives a check for $10,000 from Mrs. Henry Ford; Lord Mayor of London attends a memorial service for Edith Cavell at St. Paul's Cathedral; six U. S. army biplanes begin a 500-mile cross country flight at Ft. Sill, Okla.; Paris fashions in natural colors; eyewitness at the front gives pictures of drill with huge kites carrying specially constructed cameras; Brand Whitlock, U. S. Minister to Belgium, passes through New York; school boys in service as "juvenile cops" in New York streets; Evacuation Day is celebrated by the New York Old Guard by a flag-raising at the battery.

"A Bachelor's Christmas." (Rex. Three reels. Sun., Dec. 19.)—An appropriate Christmas release, in which sentiment overcrowds plot. Ben Wilson is featured under his own direction. Wilson is a better actor than director, as some portions of this release testify. Dorothy Phillips plays opposite. The picture is from a story by William Addison Lathrop.

"The Doomed Groom." (L-Ko. Sun., Dec. 19.)—This number features Fatty Voss as a blushing bride, May Emory and Henry Bergman. The male lead we do not know but he overworks himself in many of his scenes. A chase of a conventional sort closes the reel, rather inferior on the whole.

"Neal of the Navy." No. 14. (Panama. Two reels.)—With this installment, entitled "The Great Goal," the serial ends. The thrills last up to the last minute, when Hernandez and Inez reach Lost Isle, to find it inhabitated by a band of shipwrecked sailors, who have gained possesion of the fortune belonging to Annette.

Annette who arrives about the same time, is separated from her party, and finding her alone, Hernandez sacrifices her to the sailors for the sake of the fortune. She is rescued by Neal and a party of bluejackets. In the meantime the brute servant, through a blow, recovers his normal condition, and is revealed as Thomas Illington, Annette's long-lost father.

Recognizing Hernandez as the man responsible for all his troubles, Hernandez pursues him to the edge of a cliff, and finding himself without hope of escape, Hernandez plunges off the cliff to death. Illington and Anette come into possession of the vast fortune, and Neal and Annette are happily united.

"The New Adventures of J. Rufus Wallingford." No. 9. (Pathe. Two reels.)—"Apples and Eggbeaters" is the title under which J. Rufus and Blackie recover a part of the girls' stolen fortune from G. W. Slookum, the scheming country banker.

They find that Slookum holds a note of one Pushman, a manufacturer of eggbeaters, which the latter is unable to pay. So they finance Pushman, and soon an enormous business is being done by the Pushman company. The note is paid, and Slookum realized that there is real money in the concern.

So, when he gets an opportunity to buy out Pushman's interest for $60,000, he jumps at the chance. Blackie J. Rufus and the girls take the next train out of town, and leave Slookum in possession of the whole business, which is practically worthless.

"Ragtime Snapshots." (Phunphilms.)—This is an unusually amusing comedy staged in a photograph gallery. Luke and his partner, attracted by the pretty face of the photographer's clerk, get jobs as assistant photographers, and immediately turn things topsy turvey.

When the Two Dancing Dolls come in to be photographed their rivalry becomes intense. Then they become involved with two husky characters who enter the place, and are pursued up chimneys and across roofs. Trick photography has aided considerably in producing ludicrous situations and actions, and the fun is fast throughout.

UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

"Universal Animated Weekly," No. 197. (Universal. Wed., Dec. 15.)—Army of suffragists descends on the Sixty-fourth Congress; Great Northern, new Pacific liner, leaves San Francisco; new statue of Joan of Arc is unveiled in New York; noted resort town of Avalon, Catalina Island, goes up in $1,500,000 blaze; Ways and Means Committee of House of Representatives assemble in Washington; Labor Chief Samuel Gompers visits Universal City; Australian cadets, on tour of world, call on Mayor of New York; Universal stars show the latest thing in silk sweaters; wireless message from Germany is received at Chicago station, 5,600 miles away; scenes attending the battle of Agua Prieta, near Douglas, Ariz., out-door office to keep stenographers healthy is opened at Wellesley, Mass.; captured cannon, torpedo and mines are shown in London; Ambassador Gerard shown at his desk in Berlin; submarine built for Allies is interned at Charleston, Mass.; superdreadnaught Pennsylvania becomes flagship of Atlantic fleet.

"Father and the Boys." (Broadway Universal Feature. Five reels. Mon., Dec. 20.)—Reviewed at length in issue of Dec. 18.

"Love and a Savage." (Nestor. Mon., Dec. 20.)—In this Al Christie, comic, Lee Moran posing as a savage in the midst of civilization gives one of his best performances. In fact in "Love and a Savage," Christie has made a most excellent comedy which everyone will heartily enjoy. Betty Compson, the new Nestor beauty, Eddie Lyons and Ethyl Lynn fill the remaining principal roles.

"Christmas Memories." (Gold Seal. Three reels. Tues., Dec. 21.)—Reviewed at length in issue of Dec. 18.

"When Love Laughs." (Imp. Tues., Dec. 21.)—Not yet shown for review.

"From Beanery to Billions." (L-Ko. Two reels. Wed. Dec. 22.)—A burlesque on the melodrama again in which father and erring son are reunited through the latter's child. Then the wife must needs become accustomed to her stylish surroundings and the villain of course must be frustrated, which last is accomplished by way of a thrilling and funny chase. Alice Howell appears as the wife and cuts a ludicrous figure, carrying the picture despite occasional vulgarity.

"The Great Fear." (Laemmle. Wed., Dec. 22.)—A simple drama, very well put on by William Dowlan, with a cast which he heads, including Gloria Fonda and Lule Warrenton. A few of the scenes are a little overdone as regards sentimentality, but on the whole the picture is very pleasing. The setting of the grocery store is very realistic.

"One Hundred Years Ago." (Laemmle. Two reels. Thurs., Dec. 23.—One of those dramas in which characters of the present time are influenced in their course by apparitions of the past. The first part of the picture, which transpires in the early eighties is a costume drama, very well put on and interesting in its entirety.

The second part affords a good comparison and is satisfying in its happy finale. The story is by Anthony Coldeway, the directon by Donald MacDonald, while the cast includes Dorothy Davenport, Lee Hill and Rupert Julian.

"Monarchs of the Forest." (Powers. Split reel. Thurs., Dec. 23.)—A pictured vaudeville number showing the antics of Howard's trained bears and dogs. On the same reel with "Wild Bird Life."

"Wild Bird Life." (Powers. Split reel. Thurs., Dec. 23.)—An educational showing the lives of birds of the Atlantic coast including, swallows, sand pipers, hawks and petrels. It was very interesting, although the print shown was dim. On the same reel with "Monarchs of the Forest."

"A Tale of the C." (Victor. Three reels. Fri., Dec. 24.)—A comedy romance with many pleasant touches and most capable interpretation. Although containing little suspense, its comedy is of the best sort, while Mary Fuller and Paul Panzer do very pleasing work in the principal parts. Lucius Henderson directed from a scenario by Elaine Sterne.

"The Terrrible Truth." (Rex. Fri., Dec. 24.)—An interesting version of the eternal triangle laid in a beautiful country setting. Myrtle Gonzalez, Val Paul and Arthur Shirley lead the cast. Lynn Reynolds directed from a story by Harvey Gates

"When Rogues Fall Out." (Bison. Three reels. Sat., Dec. 25.)—Another Helen Holmes picture in which daring Helen for a time forsakes the telegraph operator's job and appears as the railroad president's daughter.

However, this fact does not deprive her of executing a brace of thrilling dare devil stunts—a drop from a bridge to a train beneath, and another drop from the drain to a trolley car.

L. D. Maloney also accomplishes much when he leaps from a train crossing the bridge, into the water. The story is of a different character than the majority of Miss Holmes' pictures. but it is always nteresting and bound to please her followers.

"Uncle Sam at Work," No. 1. (Powers. Sat., Dec. 25.)—Reviewed at length in issue of Dec. 18.

"When Three Is a Crowd." (Nestor. Sat., Dec. 25.)—By Al. Christie and produced by Horace Davey, this number is slightly too shallow, even for comedy use. There is no climax to the action, while the players do not seem to register well. Neal Burns, Billie Rhodes and Ed Burns are the leads, the latter appearing to poor advantage as an Englishman.

"Stronger Than Death." (Rex. Two reels. Sun., Dec. 26.)—This drama is based on a strong theme, but as produced with a great number of fantastical, visionary scenes is rather confusing at times. Joe DeGrasse made it from Bess Meredyth's scenario, The plot proper is intense, due in no small measure to the good acting of Louise Garbasse, Arthur Shirley and M. K. Wilson. Withal it will please, though the visionary scenes might possibly be made clearer.

"Greed and Gasoline." (L-Ko. Sun., Dec. 26.)—This comedy is based on a good idea which is overworked to an extent that is sometimes tiresome. The usual lively L-Ko climax is lacking. The cast is good, including Fatty Voss and another funny gentleman who appear as hoboes. Gertrude Selby and Reggie Morris are the Newlyweds who suffer from the blackmailing tactics of the other two.

It must be candidly admitted that "The Other Girl" is not the greatest picture ever produced. It lacks the spectacular ponderosity of "Cabiria," the seductiveness of "Carmen," the sensuous appeal of the nude. Its comedy is not broad farce or slap-stick. It lacks grim death and daring leaps. The photography is not flawless, nor is its direction absolutely masterful.

But, for consistency of story, direction, acting and photography it stands out a worthy first production. Its name and the name of its author, Augustus Thomas, its great success enjoyed on the oral stage and the wide popularity of its principal artists are assets that make "The Other Girl" a splendid commercial proposition. It is a wholesome sort of drama sprinkled with natural humor. Its scenes are splendidly staged and the large cast is made up of distinctive types. Perhaps the most prominent among the players is James J. Corbett, erstwhile champion of the world, and popular hero actor. His "Kid Garvey" of the Thomas play is refreshing in its originality. Mr. Corbett's acting is natural and convincing, and he fits the part assigned him like a glove.

Paul Gilmore's "Rev. Bradford" is a delight. Even when one considers the long line of important parts Mr. Gilmore has essayed in the past it is not difficult to say this is his greatest achievement.

[illegible], one [illegible] and [illegible] a famous health builder, looms up prominently in the story's telling.

Edith Luckett and Becky Bruce, popular young leading women of the legitimate stage, do fine justice to difficult and exacting roles.

The supporting principals fully anticipate the author's ideals and render [illegible]

An automobile accident on crowded Broadway, numerous fistic encounters between "Kid Garvey" and others, and an imposing theatre interior are among the "big" situations displayed, including a clever visualization of Corbett's early struggles to attain prominence and wealth.

Realistic settings evidently prepared without regard for expense impress one with the thought that Raver-Thomas productions are not to be stinted.

"The Other Girl" is no doubt a splendid entertainment and should be a success. It has a valuable title, its author is renowned, its stars are famous and its story consistently told by professionals. The public will appreciate this kind of picture.

BOASTING

about one's own picture might be construed as an indication of over-confidence.

A NEW VENTURE

should be signalized by definite, conservative statements—pessimistic perhaps—but so carefully prepared as not to mislead.

The satisfaction of giving more than one promises is much greater than that gained by promising more than one is able to deliver.

DECEIVING

the exhibitor is as fatal to the deceiver as misleading the public.

Therefore, with apologies to Harrison, Milne, Denig, Thew, Judson, Cooper, Blaisdell, Condon, "Sime," Holcomb, Smith, Buckley, Ennis and Grau, and other worthy critics, "The Other Girl" suffers its first review.

The Past is Prologue

¶ What Vitagraph has done in the past
Is our promise for the future

We covenant with you, our exhibitors,
To keep you a little bit
Ahead of the procession.

We covenant with you
To release nothing
Which might in any way
Harm any of you

We covenant with you
To supply a goodly share
Of excellent productions

We covenant with you and solemnly vow
To produce photoplays
Without reserve
Without self-interest
But
For the common good of all—
As it is within our power to produce

¶ Glad are we and sincerely grateful
For the task

VITAGRAPH BLUE RIBBON FEATURE

Were Old King Cole alive today
He would call for
The Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature
"WHAT HAPPENED TO FATHER"

Frank Daniels
The inimitable comic opera king
Is featured in a superb vehicle written by Mary Roberts Rinehart

The story is unique and
Critics consider this production
One of the best comedies ever released.
It embodies new comedy situations
And gives Frank Daniels an opportunity
To utilize the world famous individuality
That enabled him to win the title of
The inimitable comic opera king

The unlimited producing facilities of the Vitagraph
Coupled with Frank Daniels' enviable reputation
Make a combination that will prove to be
A great drawing card
And
Will please your audiences as well.
The release date of this Blue Ribbon Feature is December 27th.

Broadway Star Features

Are the best three reelers
In the world.

One reason for this
Is the fact that
The subjects chosen are Original in theme.
An example of this is
"THE 13TH GIRL"
Released December 25th.
This story deals with
The downfall of a beautiful girl.
The majority of the scenes
Are laid in one of
New York's most fashionable shops.
Professional models display
The present day gowns and lingerie.
The picture features
Arline Pretty
Robert Whitworth
Julia Swayne Gordon
Lillian Burns
Arthur Cozine and
Frank Currier
And is directed by Theodore Marston

———o———

Without a doubt this three reel feature
Is stronger than the majority of larger features
Presented by other manufacturers.

———o———

Stars of this magnitude
And stories of this type make
Broadway Star Features
The best three reelers
In the world

A New Era

In the history of motion pictures
Few incidents stand out with boldness
Few changes have been made in the method of release
Few new ideas have been developed in the direction of presentation

—But

Albert E. Smith and J. Stuart Blackton
Have hit upon a wonderful plan

The plan is
THE PERSONALLY PICKED PROGRAM

Every subject released under this brand
Will not only be produced under the personal supervision of J. Stuart Blackton and Albert E. Smith
But
Will be so selected as to compose
A complete evening's entertainment.
In other words, the program will comprise
The harmonious blending of subjects
A combination of good comedy and drama

The first release of
THE PERSONALLY PICKED PROGRAM
Will be composed of
A four reel dramatic subject, entitled
"ON HER WEDDING NIGHT" and
A single reel comedy
"THE PATENT FOOD CONVEYOR"
The release date is Monday, December 20th.

If an exhibitor desires to present
The best in photoplays—
Feature stars of the first magnitude—
In stories of supreme value—
We suggest that he communicate immediately with
The nearest branch of the General Film Company.

Announcement

Animal pictures such as David Horsley is producing with the wonderful Bostock animals have never before been seen upon the screen.

During the last three months these Centaur Features have established a new standard for animal pictures. They have astonished the trade by the exhibition of feats and effects that no one has ever before deemed possible.

The old style animal picture with its constant repetition of "stunts" is rapidly losing its vogue. The public is growing wise to the difference.

On the other hand, the demand has become so great for the "advanced" animal dramas and comedy-dramas of the Centaur class that, commencing in January, a five reel subject will be released every third week. These remarkable pictures, with their undeniable appeal to all ages and all classes of people, will be known as Mutual Masterpictures, De Luxe Edition. They will offer a startling array of talent.

ROY L. McCARDELL, the premier scenario writer of America, author of "The Diamond from the Sky" and a thousand other successes, has been engaged to furnish new and original stories.

MARGARET GIBSON, youthful, beautiful and talented, and IRVING CUMMINGS, a film star of international popularity, will be two of several featured players.

THE BOSTOCK ANIMALS, famous in every part of the world—educated to a point almost beyond belief—will continue to amaze, thrill and instruct.

CAPTAIN JACK BONAVITA, foremost animal trainer-director, and the original European Bostock trainers are in direct charge of the quadruped actors.

Wm. J. Bowman and U. S. Davis are the noted directors in charge of productions.

CRANE WILBUR

the eminent screen star, will be seen in a five reel Mutual Masterpicture, De Luxe Edition, every four weeks, commencing with "Vengeance Is Mine" on January 31. Mr. Wilbur is assisted by selected actors who have won recognition through motion picture acting. The plays in which Mr. Wilbur appears are strong dramatic and romantic vehicles written especially for him by authors of reputation.

GEORGE OVEY

the funniest man in America, directed by Milton Fahrney, will appear as usual in the weekly one reel Cub Comedies—the best comedy buy on the market.

MUTUAL MAST

DE LUXE

AND now we announce greater expansion in Mutual film activities. Beginning the week of January 17th, 1916, the Mutual Film Corporation will present a new and startling schedule of feature productions to be known as "Mutual Masterpictures, De Luxe Edition." THREE of these productions will be released EVERY WEEK—each in five reels. They will feature many famous Broadway stage stars and screen favorites. They will be features of an extraordinary character—picturizations of famous books, plays, and powerful, original scenarios by noted authors. These three-a-week "Mutual Masterpictures, De Luxe Edition," will be released in addition to the regular $8,000,000 Mutual Program. The Mutual Program will also be expanded by the release of three three-reel features every week instead of two, and the addition of VOGUE COMEDIES featuring England's greatest knockabout comedian. With the vast assortment of scenic, topical and comic specialties in the Mutual Program, exhibitors will find in "Mutual Service" a wonderful opportunity for a well-balanced program of strong box-office attractions. A few of the forthcoming five-reel "Mutual Masterpictures, De Luxe Edition," are:

Gentlemen:

Having used two Simplex projecting machines for one year in this theatre, wish to add a few lines of testimony to the pleasure I have in using them and to tell you of the excellent satisfaction they are giving us. The character of this theatre makes it such that a high standard must be maintained at all times.

We have not expended one cent on repairs during the year, and as I have used all makes of machines the past fifteen years can say this of no other make. Can this record be broken by any other make?

We attribute our tremendous success and high standard to the projection for which the Simplex Machines are wholly responsible and cannot help but recommend them to all exhibitors who desire to obtain the highest projection results at the lowest cost.

Everything for Theatre, Exchange and Studio

Motion Picture Projection Simplified

By J. H. Hallberg

Figure 29 also illustrates another installation connected to this system through pipes "H" and "I" in shunt with the main distribution system pipes "C" and "E." These pipes connect with another cylinder "G" with its piston connected to a movable member "J" which can exert an influence or blow at points "K" and "L," supported on the base "M." With this form of a motor or power transmitter the speed of the reversal would not so seriously impair its work if the reversals were increased above normal, but still there would be opportunity at the higher speed to prevent the piston "G" from performing its full work, due to impedance or choking effect which is really a kick back or spring action. Taking for granted that the arrangement of "G" is such that it is operative to accomplish a certain purpose, then the original power plant "A" and "B" will supply power at "K" and "L" but not in a continuous potential or force. The potential or force is only high or at its maximum when "J" comes to a full stop at "K" and on the reversal stroke at "L." Here you have an illustration of the A. C. arc. Anybody can understand that the force or power exerted by "J" is never felt or consummated until "J" has hit against "K" or "L," and "J" cannot after it has once come to a stop, exert power again until its motion has been reversed. In view of this explanation you will understand that with the A. C. arc the current as illustrated by "J," travels in the space between "L" and "K" which represents the arc oscillating back and forth, but it does not do work excepting at the points "K" and "L" which represent the upper and lower carbon crater.

You might say: in order to get continuous power at "K" and "L," why not move them closer together so "J" will touch both of them? If you do this you will, to be sure, have a trembling motion back and forth or alternate pressure on "K" and "L," but you will lose the momentum of "J" between "K" and "L," which gives you the potential or the pressure that is necessary to give a real blow.

If I should put "K" and "L" close to "J," I would have a closer representation of the incandescent lamp where there is a power flowing through the filament which appears to the eye to be continuous, because the filament holds the heat during the dead period of the reversal or cycle. You know the incandescent lamp gives light which proves expenditure of energy, but its intensity is not sufficient to produce the results required for a projector arc which calls for a continued set of impulses or hammer blows alternately at the upper and lower carbon. I may go further to prove that my demonstration of the arc "J" acting upon the carbon craters "K" and "L" in Fig. 29, is applicable to the case, but suggesting that you use the resultant sound in this case in place or instead of the resultant power or blow.

The arc or hammer "J" oscillates back and forth between points "K" and "L" at a rapid point of speed, and considerable sound will be set forth. If on the other hand, we move "K" and "L" together so that "J" cannot move back and forth, the sound will disappear, and as a result the efficiency of the device will be decreased in exactly the same manner as if you put the upper and lower carbon of an arc lamp burning properly, so close together that the arc cannot exert a sufficient potential blow at the carbon craters to maintain the required intensity of light.

The object of the foregoing illustration is to bring before the student the A. C. problem, in a simple way by comparison. A water system can generally be understood because its action is simple and can be tried out and above all, you can feel or see not only the result, but the movement of the power produced, as well as the transmitting medium, which in the illustration has been designated as water, oil or any other similar liquid. I have demonstrated to students the example in Fig. 29 by merely taking two rubber balls, such as used for anatomizers, filling them partly with water and connecting them with a rubber tube. By slowly forcing the water by pressing on one, into the other the surging of the water back and forth is accomplished and up to a certain speed the complete exchange of water between the two balls is possible. If too rapid an exchange in the displacement of water is effected you will not get the full benefit of the complete stroke or reversal, because the impedance of the spring effect is entirely too great.

Majestic, Detroit, Offers An Entertainment De Luxe

Amphitheatre Style of Construction, Giving Each of 2,160 Seats an Unobstructed View of Stage, Used in Theatre of Remarkable Beauty, Whose Furnishings Are in Keeping with the High Class Program Presented to Patrons—Details of Arrangement and Program

AN "entertainment de luxe" is probably the best fitting description of the amusement program offered by the management of the beautiful Majestic theatre, Detroit. Manager M. W. McGee has succeeded in making the Majestic, with its seating capacity of 2,160, one of the most talked-of theatres in the country.

In the interior arrangement of the Majestic the amphitheatre style of construction was used. The seats were inclined gradually right from the stage to what ordinarily would be the peak of the "gallery" without any perceptible break. This has proven popular because all seats command an unobstructed view of the stage.

The next feature that is striking about the Majestic is the fact that every entertainment is given a "one week stand," and despite the fact that it is located more than a mile and a half from the town town district, it has been filled not only rush nights but every night in the week, rain or shine.

Details of Construction

The Majestic theatre was conceived by A. Arthur Caille, owner of the Fine Arts and Maxine theatres. The plans were made by C. Howard Crane, architect, and built by the Frank Farrington

THE INTERIOR OF THE MAJESTIC THEATRE, DETROIT

Company, of Detroit. It was decided to use the frontage on Woodward avenue to the best advantage, and it was therefore faced with glazed polychrome terra cotta, treated in the most modern architectural style. The entrance, which is in the center of the building, has three stories on either side, and the second floor is filled with high-class shops for women of taste. The theatre entrance itself has an elaborate marquise extending to the curb, so that patrons in their automobiles may take ladies to the entrance without being inconvenienced in wet or stormy weather.

The entrance is entirely finished with tile, marble and terra cotta, in keeping with both exterior and interior of the building. The lobbies and foyers, in addition to their beauty, are so spacious that the entire seating capacity of the theatre can be accommodated in them. In addition to the foyer, there is a recessed loggia, or lounging room, which is artistically fitted out, containing an open fireplace to add to its attractiveness. On the other side are spacious retiring and rest rooms for ladies, with a maid in attendance and a large smoking room for gentlemen is also provided.

The arrangement of the seating is said to be unlike that found anywhere else in the country in a moving picture theatre. Every seat has what is termed a perfect sight line to the stage, and is very comfortable, being finished in leather with soft but firm upholstering. There are forty boxes on both sides of the auditorium and across the center, being designed for comfort and to accommodate box parties.

Ivory, old rose and gold are the basis of the color scheme, while the decorations are conformed to the Adam period. The ceiling is particularly handsome, set off by the panels above the boxes and the frieze which extends completely around the auditorium. Entrance to the theatre is gained by easy runways or through large, well-lighted passageways, each aisle being carpeted with colors that match its surroundings.

Original Lighting System

A feature that at once impresses the observer is the system of lighting, which is distinctly original and cannot be found elsewhere. It is known as a self-suffusing, semi-direct, which enables the operator to throw the house into moonlight, sun, dawn or gloom whenever the occasion and stage pictures require. The electric lighting features in the theatre are unique and are the original designs of Robert D. Wardle.

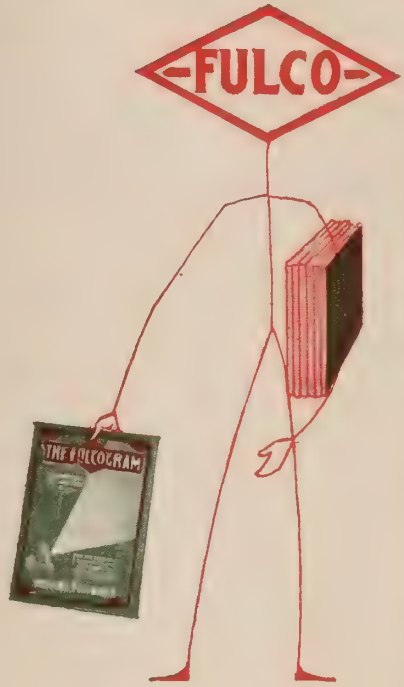
Exhaust fans, working rapidly and noiselessly, keep the air in motion constantly. In the summer, the air is washed, then cooled in a large ice chamber and forced into the building by large electric fans, so that any temperature desired may be maintained. In the winter the air is heated in a specially constructed chamber, and then forced from beneath the seats into the auditorium.

A feature of the performance that seems to be always pleasing to the immense audience is the playing of the pipe organs by Frank Fruttchey. Two large pipe organs are installed, one on either side of the auditorium. These organs are exceedingly large and comprehensively toned. The console placed in the center of the orchestra pit is connected electrically with the four great sections, great organ, small organ, pedal organ and mechanical organ, and is also constructed so that organ music, piano music and symphonic mysic can be played.

The draperies of the Majestic cost as much as the furnishings of many small theatres. The old rose velour with gold trimming has created a harmonious effect that is rich and pleasing to the eye. Hundreds of yards of velour are used in the immense stage curtain, the many portieres and lambrequins.

Draws Patronage from Entire City

To show the same program for one week, and that in what may be termed an outlying theatre, where the seating capacity is more than two thousand, is something that has probably never been done on such a scale until undertaken by Manager McGee at the Majestic. Naturally, the people in the immediate neighborhood would not be sufficient to keep the playhouse open from 2:30 to 11 P. M. each day, but the Majestic draws people from every part of Detroit.



The performance is continuous, but it is divided so as to start at 2:00, 4:30, 7:00 and 9 P. M. It is opened with a prelude by the organist from some popular classic opera. Then comes a topical review which is strictly a "Majestic" review. Following this comes a short picture of popular interest or educational value; then comes the main picture of the evening. A comedy is also shown, but this is placed following the main picture, so that those from out of town can see the main picture and leave before the comedy is shown if desired.

WORK STARTS ON NEW PICTURE THEATRE AT GREENSBURG, PA.

GREENSBURG, Pa., is to have a fine new motion picture theatre and the work of excavating for the basement has been started. The theatre is being erected by M. Manos. It will have a seating capacity of 1,350, of which 875 seats will be on the first floor and 450 in the balcony. The structure will be three stories high, the upper floors to be used as offices.

The building will be 50 by 180 and will have a stage 33 by 56 feet, in case the house should be used for other purposes than that of motion pictures. The ground has been leased for a period of 21 years and the building will cost between $45,000 and $50,000. Mr. Manos now owns the Lyric theatre at Greensburg. This is a 300-seat house and runs Paramount and Fox pictures at 5 and 10 cents during the day and 15 cents at night.

EFFICIENCY OF ARC LAMPS AS USED IN PICTURE MACHINES

W. M. H., Kinsley, Kan.—Will you kindly advise me through your Projection Department regarding the efficiency of arc lamps as used in picture machines. I understand that the old style enclosed arc lamps had an efficiency of 2 watts per candle power. We are using 45 Ampere A. C. through a Hallberg A. C. Economizer, 110 volts. Supposing the arc voltage to be 35 volts, we would have a current consumption of 1,575 watts, and at an efficiency of 2 watts would give us only 787 candle power, and as so much of the light is not thrown toward the condensers, the actual candle power used msut be comparatively small. What I would like to know is this: What is the apparent candle power of the arc at 45 amperes, 35 volts? What is the candle power, delivered to the condensers, to be used in producing the picture? This is a subject upon which I have never seen any data, and my reason for wishing to know is not merely curiosity.

ANSWER.—The enclosed arc lamp as it has been and still is regularly used for street and interior lighting, cannot be used in a comparative way by which to judge a projector arc.

I was for many years interested in the design, development and construction of both open and enclosed arc lamps for street lighting.

The open arc as originally used generally consumed 10 amperes with a voltage drop across the arc of approximately 45, making the watts consumed at the arc 450. This lamp was generally rated as a 2,000 candle power arc. It is true that this candle power was developed in a certain direction, which was approximately 45 degs. below a horizontal line run through the center of the arc, with the positive crater above the lower negative.

For general illumination, however, full use could not be made of this brilliancy, which only existed in one certain direction. For street lighting, for instance, the horizontal effort was more desirable. The aim was to prevent a brilliant illuminated spot below the lamp with a rapidly decreasing amount of illumination further away.

It is interesting to note that a 450 watt open arc street lamp, which gave a maximum candle power of about 2,000 in the downward direction, gave only slightly over 400 candle power in the horizontal direction, and in the upper direction above the center of the arc the candle power dropped rapidly down to about 100. Nevertheless, in the early days the 2,000 candle power rating was accepted for a 450 watt open D. C. arc.

Some years later the enclosed arm lamp was developed for street and interior lighting, and with this form of lamp it was possible to maintain a 5.6 ampere arc with a potential drop of 80 volts within a small glass globe inside of the larger outer globe. The arc when enclosed, consuming according to the above figures about 450 watts, would give far better distribution of light. At no point would the candle power of the positive crater be over about 1,000, and the horizontal candle power would average 600 candle power. This was a decided improvement when used for street lighting because it did away with the intensely brilliant spot below the lamp, and gave a more uniform illumination in all directions, but of course at a great sacrifice of efficiency.

For projector arc lighting the first condition, such as existed with the open arc is, of course, the more desirable one, and therefore the open arc has been applied in all instances for projection.

With D. C. it becomes possible to burn the upper or positive carbon in such a manner that practically the entire crater is exposed to the condensing lens. Consequently the maximum intrinsic brilliancy of the crater is available wtih D. C. for concentration at the aperture on the machine. Under this condition an efficiency approximating or exceeding 1 candle power for each ¼ watt is possible.

With A. C. operating with a rheostat, the distance between the upper and lower carbon when maintaining an act of approximately 35 to 40 volts is so great that only one crater can be focused at the time. This limits the available source of light to one A. C. crater under ordinary conditions.

With 60 cycle A. C., due to the fact that the current is intermittent reversing 60 times per second, the intrinsic brilliancy of the crater is much reduced as compared with D. C. This fact, taken together with the possible exposure of only one of the craters at the time, materially reduces the available illumination for projection.

However, when a Hallberg A. C. Economizer or similar transforming device is used, and when the carbons are set either straight up and down, or the lower straight up and down, and the upper at an angle relative to it, it is possible to operate with a much shorter arc, varying between 30 and 33 volts, which consumes the upper and lower carbon point in such a manner that both the upper and the lower craters can be exposed, giving maximum illumination which materially improves the condition with the A. C. arc. As a matter of fact, through this method of operation more than double the amount of illumination can be had at the aperture for the same amount of power expended at the arc, as compared with an arc controlled by a rheostat or a choke coil.

I don't know that any accurate photometric tests have been made in the manner described, but, judging by comparison, the efficiency is well within one candle power for each ½ watt expended.

Experiments have been made by many more or less inexperienced in the art of projector lighting, with a view to operating the arc at a high voltage, so as to do away with the rheostat on the 110-volt circuits, or by using impregnated carbons, such as have been used for flaming arc lamps, but the results have been poor, and no advantage gained; in fact, it was almost impossible through that means to produce a steady light on the screen.

CONNECTING TRANSFORMERS IN SERIES ON 220-VOLT CIRCUIT

C. K., Brooklyn, N. Y.—Can in case of emergency two 110 volt transformers be hooked in series and used on a 220 volt circuit? When I get a short on secondary what blows booth fuses On one occasion when working a Power's inductor, 208 volts, a short in lamp blew meter fuses, why? Thank you for an early answer.

Ans.—If you possess two 110 volt Hallberg Standard type A. C. electric economizers, which are transformers with absolutely separate primary and secondary windings, it is possible to connect these in series on a 220 volt circuit in three different manners as shown in the accompanying illustrations.

Referring to Fig. 1 the line or primary windings are connected in series across the 220 volt supply circuit. Please note that the secondary windings of economizer No. 1 are short circuited, but the secondary windings of economizers No. 2 are to be connected to the carbons. With this combination it is possible to secure for a short time, that is for intermittent work, between 60 and 65 amperes at the arc. This particular connection should not be used for all day runs, but in case of an emergency for an hour or two at the time, there would be no harm to the equipment.

Fig. 2 illustrates another way to connect two separate 110 volt economizers, but in this instance both secondary windings are connected to the circuit which feeds the arc lamps, and with this connection it is possible to get between 80 and 100 amperes at the arc indefinitely for continuous service.

Fig. 3 illustrates another method of connecting two 110 volt Hallberg A. C. economizers on 220 volt line. With this form of connection it is possible to operate one arc on economizer No. 1 and another arc on economizer No. 2, at the same time securing between 40 and 50 amperes at each arc. If one lamp is cut out with the connections as shown in Fig. 3 by operating the switch or separating the carbons it would be possible to secure only about 30 amperes on the remaining arc.

Other style transformers constructed on the same basic principle as the Hallberg A. C. economizer can be similarly connected, but in other types where the secondary and primary windings are interconnected, such as in auto-transformers, the same advantage of connection cannot in all instances be obtained so that the rule given above for the A. C. Hallberg economizer does not hold good for all kinds of compensarcs, compensators and similar devices.

With Hallberg A. C. economizer it is possible to put the carbons together and not below the fuse on the line, providing the fuses of 35 ampere capacity for 110 volts and about 15 to 20 ampere capacity for 220 volts. With any of these devices, however, the fuse may blow if it is of just the capacity required for the transformer when operating normally, because with the short circuited arc there will be an increase in the ampere flow on the line. This increase varies for different makes and types of transformers.

I believe that on the Powers' inductor for 110 volts, if the carbons are short circuited when the switch is on the high notch it will blow a 40 ampere line fuse, and on 220 volts it will blow a 20 ampere line fuse, if the short circuit at the arc is left long enough. The remedy is to use a fuse of 5 ampere higher capacity if you anticipate continual prolonged short circuits.

Under normal conditions, however, these fuses should last as a short circuit is an unexpected and unnecessary occurrence in a well managed projector equipment.

CONTEMPT CASE FOLLOWS DECISION OF OMAHA JUDGE HOLDING PICKETING OF THEATRE LEGAL

DISTRICT COURT at Omaha was called upon the other day to determine whether union operators could picket a motion picture theatre wearing badges, "Do Not Patronize This Theatre—Unfair to Organized Labor," and tell each person passing the place that the theatre was unfair.

Managers of the Princess, Fourteenth and Douglas streets, Omaha, refuesed to put in an union operator. The matter was brought up before the Central Labor union, of which the operators' union is a member, repeatedly. Committeers from the central body were sent to confer with the Princess' owners, Samuel Harding and Harry L. Goldberg, but the operator against whom the objections were raised, was allowed to remain.

Then the picketing began. One of the picketers was arrested for assault. Then a number of charges and counter-charges resulted, with a number of arrests. Finally the matter was taken to district court by Harding and Goldberg. After a hearing Judge W. A. Redick decided the unionists had a right to picket, giving a long, explanatory decision in the case.

The next move was the citing of several members of the local union for contempt. The court ordered "peaceful picketing only" and it was charged they yelled, blew cigarette smoke into women's faces, used bad language and performed acts which exceeded the "persuasion of the patron's will," which had been held legal. The restraining order had forbidden acts or language which had the effect of coercion or intimidation.

The hearing on the contempt case has been continued.

The case has attracted much attention in Omaha, the operators telling their story on floats in parades and in other ways. The union has for months been trying to get every operator in the city into the organization. Committees from the Central Labor union have made numerous calls. "Unfair" lists have been published repeatedly, urging union men to stay away from certain theatres

TEXT OF WAGE SCHEDULE AND NEW AGREEMENT SIGNED WITH OPERATORS BY 90 BALTIMORE THEATRES

FROM G. Kingston Howard, president of the Baltimore Moving Picture Operators' Union, has been received the wage schedule and working agreement, effective November 3, 1915, signed by ninety out of ninety-five houses in that city. It is quoted in full herewith:

Wage schedule and working agreement of Moving Picture Operators' Protective Union, Local No. 181, I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O. of Baltimore, Md.; effective November 3, 1915:

One operator, night work only, five hours or less daily, no relief, not less than $14.00 per week. With one matinee per week beginning at 2 P. M. or later, including not less than one hour relief for supper, not less than $15.00 per week. Without supper relief, not less than $15.50 per week.

Open-air theatres, night work only, five hours or less daily, no relief, not less than $14.00 per week, regardless of weather conditions.

All matinees, opening at 2 P. M. or later, and closing at 5 P. M. or earlier, not less than $1,00 extra each matinee.

One operator, eight hours or less, including not less than one hour relief for supper daily, not less than $18.00 per week.

One operator, nine hours or less, including not less than one hour relief for supper daily, not less than $20.00 per week. This also applies to vaudeville or other houses playing two or more shows daily.

One operator, ten hours or less, including not less than one hour relief for supper daily, not less than $22.00 per week.

Theatres running longer hours shall require two operators, and time shall be divided equally between them.

Two operators, each working six and one-half hours or less daily, no relief, not less than $16.00 each per week. For longer hours operators shall be paid pro rata.

Operators shall not work more than their regular daily shift without permission from this organization.

Overtime, consisting of supper hour and all work performed outside of scheduled hours, except keeping operating room clean, not less than fifty cents per hour or fraction thereof. Operators shall report for duty at least fifteen minutes before opening of show.

Entertainments, such as churches, lodges, etc., one operator, five hours or less, not less than $3.00 each performance. For setting up machine, booth, etc., not less than $1.00 extra. For taking down machine, booth, etc., not less than $1.00 extra.

Carrying reels, one way, $1.50 per week. Both ways, $2.50 per week. The members of this organization do not care to carry film at all and believe that this service can be performed equally as well by any other employee.

A manager must give an operator one week's notice in writing before discharging him, otherwise he forfeits one week's salary, which is paid to the operator. This rule may be waived with permission in writing from this organization.

An operator must give a manager one week's notice in writing before quitting, otherwise he forfeits one week's salary, which is paid to the manager. This rule may be waived by permission of the manager in writing.

Managers insisting on less than five minutes intermission each show, will furnish a boy to rewind the film. Operators shall not rewind film while operating machine.

Regular operators may lay off one night each week, providing they furnish union substitute, at no extra expense to the management.

Six week-days shall constitute a week. Sundays, double time.

The union agrees to furnish sober, reliable and competent men.

An authorized inspector of this organization shall be permitted to visit the operating room at all times while the house is open for business, to see that the operator is properly performing his duty.

In the event that any conditions arise that are not covered by this agreement, a decision by the president or business agent of this organization shall be recognized until the next regular meeting of this organization.

Should the undersigned management be declared unfair by the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Moving Picture Machine Operators, and same is endorsed by the Baltimore

NATION'S LARGEST PICTURE THEATRE, WITH 6,000 SEATS, PLANNED FOR ROCHESTER, N. Y.

PLANS for a new motion picture theatre, to be the largest in the country, have been prepared by Architect Leon Lempert for George E. Simpson of Rochester, N. Y., and it is expected that work will be started in the spring. The theatre will have a seating capacity of nearly 6,000 people.

George E. Simpson, promoter of the project, is the active head of the new Regersen company, which is operating the Regent and Gordon theatres, the two leading motion picture houses of Rochester. Mr. Simpron has been in the picture business for a number of years. He ran the Hippodrome in Main street east, Rochester, until the business developed to such an extent that he was obliged to build a new house in East avenue, the fashionable street of the town. This theatre is the biggest in the city and commands the top prices.

The new house will have a seating capacity of about 2,800 on the lower floor, 2,000 in the first balcony, and about 1,000 in the second balcony. The plan is to have the admission price to this second balcony five cents at all times. It is thus figured that all classes of people can be reached. The house will be so constructed, it is said, that the vision from the second balcony will be just as good as that now afforded in most first balconies. Prominent New York engineers have been called in by the architect to discuss the various problems which have been presented.

New and novel features to be introduced are a tea room where everything will be sold at cost and which will be run solely for the convenience of patrons; a nursery where mothers can leave their youngsters and be assured that the little ones will have the best of care; also a parking place for automobiles.

The second balcony will be reached either by escalators or big elevators. The new theatre will be called the Hippodrome and will be located only a short distance from Main street. It will have a frontage of 165 feet.

CIRCLE THEATRE COMPANY, INDIANAPOLIS, INCORPORATES TO BUILD $200,000 HOUSE

ARTICLES of incorporation of the Circle Theatre Company, which was organized for general amusement purposes and particularly to operate a new theatre which is to be built in Monument Place by the Monument Realty Company, the site of the Horace F. Wood livery barn, Indianapolis, have been filed with the Secretary of State of Indiana. The capital stock of the company is $25,000.

The stockholders of the realty company are also the stockholders of the Circle Theatre Company. The officers and directors are: President, A. L. Block, L. Straus & Company; vice-president, Robert Lieber, of H. Lieber Company; secretary, Ralph S. Norwood; treasurer, Meyer Efroymson, of Efroymson & Wolf; Morris Cohn, Denver, Col., and Albert J. Gilligham, of Detroit, who owns large picture theatres in Detroit and Grand Rapids, and Isidore Feibleman, of Bamberger & Feibleman, attorneys. Additional incorporators are Arthur L. Strauss, of L. Strauss & Company, and Preston C. Rubush, of Rubush & Hunter. Tenants have vacated the property and the wrecking of the old buildings will start soon.

The plans for the theatre building are well under way, and the erection of the building will begin early in January. The highest grade of motion pictures will be presented at popular prices, and the house will contain a fine orchestral organ and one of the features will be a large orchestra. The theatre will have a seating capacity of 3,000, and the theatre is to be erected at a cost of about $200,000. It is planned to open it in May.

The Christmas Cheer

That Is Proverbial

—is the happy possession, day in and day out, of the exhibitor who has installed a

RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREEN

The perfect projection which it gives—and which can be secured in no other way, smooths his business way;—his patrons are satisfied and his electric current bills are low.

Radium Gold Fibre Screens have stood the test of time. They have led the field for years. Theatres in which they are used represent the "class" of the motion picture industry. The Strand, New York City, foremost of America's photoplay houses, has used a Radium Gold Fibre Screen at every single performance since its opening.

There is no earthly reason why every exhibitor in the country should not have perfect projection. Certainly photoplay patrons will reward the exhibitors who do their best toward showing faultless pictures. The installation of a Radium Gold Fibre Screen should be the first step—and this step alone will work almost inconceivable wonders.

Our recently adopted sales plan is a particularly liberal one. Our goods are priced in accordance with the standards used in the best business circles. Our business methods are fair —and we guarantee our product.

Edited by Nathan Myers

MAKERS STRIVE TO GIVE EXHIBITION SCREENS THAT SHOW PICTURES WITHOUT EYESTRAIN

THERE has been no subject of greater interest to the exhibitor, and perhaps none more discussed and written about than the material of which the screen should be made.

The writer reviewed this matter some months ago, and advocated very strongly the use of the better of the many specially prepared screens. My opinion has not changed as to the value of such screens, but has been greatly modified by actual experience in certain installations, and for that reason I desire to review this field once more.

There are as aforesaid many patented screens, of glass and of various materials stretched on a wood frame. They are relatively of varying quality, and so greatly do they differ in result, that it might be said some are of the highest value and others are very ineffective. For obvious reasons the writer does not mention names. The buyer must be guided by the advice of the experienced in the purchase of a patented screen or depend upon personal investigation. The latter, he might well do in conjunction with his advisor if that be practicable.

The prepared or patented screens claim, and most do result in a saving of electricity and a better reflection to those directly in front of the screen. Some have the value of producing a mellow tone to the black and white film, enhancing greatly the effect. Since features are now being produced in tones this mellowing of the picture is not so important as it has been.

Eye strain is also claimed to be lessened by these patented screens. This has been a disputed question.

The writer firmly believes that the better of these screens give the long felt need in projection to the theatre that is proportionately long. The picture is clear; it has an exceptional softness, and detail, and does not take the same amperage to illuminate it.

Obviating "Fading Away"

But—and here is the large "but"—in a house which is wider than its depth, the same equal result is not obtained. That portion of the audience directly in front of the screen will, as in the long house, get an improved picture, but from the centre of the house the further one views the picture away from the centre the poorer the picture becomes. This is termed "fading away."

This defect is not very noticeable. It is gradual and the casual observer is not aware of it. It is resultant from the nature of the materials and light reflection. The more acute the angle of vision, the more does the defect exist.

It is slightly obviated by setting the screen as far away from the audience as possible.

The question arises whether the "fade away" defect is bad enough to offset the extra quality of the picture to those in direct line of vision. This could best be determined in each individual case. Certainly the exhibitor seeks an average in betterment, and if the defect is not too great to the few it is better to endure it, for the betterment to a greater number.

The plaster screen still has its advocates. It is white, it has about the same reflection in all directions, or rather it fades away to the sides less than the patented screens. It does require a higher amperage. Its pictures are white; there is no tone to them. It might well be said that few appreciate these desired refinements, and that more measure result by the contrast of white and black.

Canvas or duck screens properly stretched and painted with suitable materials are highly favored. A slight blue just off the dead white is most satisfactory.

In viewing any picture close to the screen, and in front, there appears an effect resembling a waterfall, a repetition of bubbles. This effect is noticeable in all screens and cannot be eliminated, and is the cause of people avoiding the front seats.

ANNOUNCER FOR THEATRE EXTERIORS AN ATTRACTIVE DEVICE

THE announcer is a distinctly new and effectcive means of advertising for picture shows or other similar enterprises that is being used extensively in Chicago and other cities.

The announcer is built in the form of an enclosed crystal Kiosk constructed almost entirely of metal and plate glass and of such a substantial and permanent nature as to be impervious to the weather.

THE ELECTRIC ANNOUNCER IN PLACE

Each of the four sides of the announcer has a plate glass door and back of these are ground glass panels, measuring approximately 30 inches by 44 inches, that will accommodate a one sheet poster. The glass panels to which the lithographs are attached are ground on one side for the purpose of distributing evenly the light passing through the lithographs from the rear.

Just above each poster space is a similar but smaller glass panel for the insertion of the standard size printed announcements, such as Today, Tonight, Tomorrow and Saturday, which also illuminate the same as the posters. When the plate glass doors are closed the posters are protected from injury in any way and are distinctly visible day or night.

The lower section of the announcer is an interchangeable letter sign on each of the four sides for the purpose of further describing the features referred to in the lithographs above. Each sign has four lines with spaces for fifteen letters in each line and constructed so that the lettering can be readily changed as desired.

One 500 watt nitrogen or tungsten lamp inside the announcer illuminates the four lithographs, date lines and interchangeable letter signs so as to attract attention in a pleasing manner for a distance of a block or more.

The Rawson and Evans Company, of 711 West Washington Boulevard, Chicago, who are the manufacturers of this attractive and most practical means of display, state that the demand is increasing rapidly.

LIGHT ABSORPTION!

In speaking of "LIGHT ABSORPTION" we mean the light you pay for but don't get. Most screens "absorb" too much of the light, and consequently are expensive to use at ANY PRICE.

The Minusa Gold Fibre screen, by actual test, absorbs less than one per cent of the light used. This wonder screen reflects ALL of the light back to the audience (where it belongs), and gives a beautiful "natural" picture, without "Fuzz."

The "Minusa" cuts your light bill in HALF, reduces the heat in the lamp house, and eliminates the cost of broken "condensers."

The lighting company pays for your screen.

Besides being a busy little saver, the "Minusa" does not "tire the eyes." Nothing is so vexing to an audience as having to strain to SEE the picture. It's the easiest way for an exhibitor to ruin an otherwise well regulated house.

You are in business to MAKE MONEY, not selfishly, but artistically. Get a Minusa Gold Fibre screen, "Built By Brains," and save your audience and yourself.

SUBSTITUTE FOR METOL REPORTED BY NEW YORK CHEMIST

DR. C. J. THATCHER, Riverdale avenue and 230th street, New York City, who is a graduate f the Chemical Department of the University of Leipzig, has since the war began, been endeavoring to manufacture a product to take the place of Metol. The result of this work is the manufacture of a product called Kathol, which is now being placed upon the market.

Some exhaustive tests have been made as to the efficacy of this new product and in each case it is reported to have proven a success.

The resemblance between these two products is so close that any photographer or laboratory man may use his own preferred development formula, merely substituting Kathol for Metol as no change in proportions are necessary.

The United States Patent Office has granted Dr. Thatcher patent for his developer.

Still further tests are at the present time being made and will be reported in a later issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

NEW PROJECTOR TO BE PLACED ON THE MARKET

THE Stern Manufacturing Company of 109 North Tenth street, Philadelphia, announces that they will very soon place a new projection machine on the market.

In the announcement, it is stated that case-hardened steel will be used throughout the sprockets, shaft, etc. This machine will be substantial, solid and of considerable weight.

The price of this machine will be about $200, with motor and all other up-to-date attachments.

The method of distribution will not be through jobbers and from them to dealers, but directly with any and all dealers throughout the country without restrictions.

Further details on this machine will be given through the NEWS when it is ready for the market.

INCREASING DEMAND FOR "SPEEDCO" MACHINE

THE adoption by the Speed Controller Company, of the name "Speedco" as applied to their automatic projection arc feeding machine, heretofore known simply as the Arc Controller, has apparently become a valuable asset to their business, for they advise of increasing demand for their product.

Recent installations of their machines have been in the Exhibition Room of the Nicholas Power Company, 90 Gold street, New York; "City" theatre at Brockton, Mass.; the recently-completed "City" theatre at Newark, N. J., and four of their machines are in use at the "Duplex" theatre, Detroit, Mich.

Directory of New Theatres

This department is designed to be a weekly guide to all sales, leases, construction and remodeling of photoplay theatres. If you are building, selling, leasing or renovating, kindly communicate it at once for publication.

CALIFORNIA

AFTER several delays contracts have been awarded and work has been commenced on the remodeling of the American theatre on Market street, San Francisco, just beyond Seventh street. Considerable new steel will be installed, and about $25,000 will be expended on the house before it is again reopened with moving pictures as the attraction.

J. W. Considine, of the Sullivan & Considine Circuit, was in San Francisco during the last week of the Exposition, and announced that a sale of this circuit was being negotiated. The Empress theatre, which has been making such a success with the William Fox attractions of late, is owned by this combination of vaudeville interests.

The Rex theatre at Clovis has been purchased by A. C. Weaver, a recent arrival from Fresno.

The Jitney theatre, opened at Fresno during the past year by K. S. Cashin, has been sold to J. Eul, who will conduct it in conjunction with the Majestic theatre.

Plans for building a new theatre at Lindsay, in the celebrated orange district of Central California, have been announced by F. H. Smith, an exhibitor of that place.

A moving picture theatre to cost about $100,000 is to be erected on the site of the present Rice Institute at 17th street and San Pablo avenue, Oakland, by Vance & Holton. It will be ready for occupancy next July.

CANADA

It is rumored that the Majestic theatre, Adelaide street, West Toronto, will shortly be opened as a moving picture theatre for the exhibiting of features, but the concluding arrangements have yet to be made, according to the theatre owners.

KANSAS

A picture theatre that is to cost $7,500 is being erected at Salina by F. C. York.

The Orpheum theatre at Pittsburg, Kan., was destroyed by fire on November 24. It was built at a cost of $40,000, and will be rebuilt.

The Home National Bank of Arkansas City has purchased the Lotus theatre building in that city.

G. M. Smith is to erect a new motion picture theatre at Augusta for F. G. Yates. It is to cost $8,000.

Abe Jacobson, of Topeka, has been granted a permit to erect a $10,000 motion picture theatre in that city. It is to be of stone and brick construction, and will be completed on March 1.

KENTUCKY

The Capital theatre at Frankfort, which has been leased by the Broadway Amusement Company of Louisville, and which has been rebuilt into one of the most comfortable and prettiest amusement houses in Central Kentucky, was thrown open to the public recently. The theatre has been redecorated. In the gallery, which will be reserved for negroes, are accommodations for 165 prsons. An indirect illuminating system furnishes the light. A new heating system has been installed, and there are ample exits. The remodeling of the building cost about $10,000.

Work on a motion picture theatre at Mayfield is nearing completion, and it is expected that the house will be ready for business about the first of the new year. The new theatre will be under the management of W. F. Grau, who now operates the Dixie theatre at Mayfield.

The Pastime theatre at Maysville and equipment has been sold to Charles Triebel, of New Richmond, Ohio. Mr. Triebel at the present time operates a picture theatre at New Richmond. He plans to remodel the Pastime, and to open it in the near future as a motion picture house.

ILLINOIS

Fred. Stelzer has purchased the Princess motion picture theatre at Lincoln from Snyder & Belaski.

Manager W. M. Sauvage has changed his program at the Temple theatre in Alton, and is now showing Triangle pictures.

August Johannsen has purchased the Grand theatre at Rock Falls from A. N. Cole.

Wilson McKim has been appointed manager of the Lyric theatre at Rock Falls.

INDIANA

The Royal theatre at Frankfort, which was damaged by fire November 12, reopened December 6, after it had been redecorated. The operating booth has been reconstructed and reinforced to withstand the possibility of another fire.

The Jefferson theatre at Jeffersonville, under the management of Harry Piefer and the Lewis brothers, has been thoroughly overhauled. A $650 piano and a $200 motion picture machine have been added under the new management.

The old post office building at Mishawaka is to be remodeled into a motion picture theatre by O. J. Lambiotte at a cost of about $6,000.

The Bell theatre at Warsaw has been bought by O. L. Winslow from C. A. Rigdon.

The Bijour theatre at Orleans is to be moved across the street from its present location.

The West Market Street theatre, at Bluffton, called the Palace, is being dismantled. W. H. Sawyer says he decided there was not the opportunity for a theatre in Bluffton that he thought when he started to remodel.

The Franklin theatre at Michigan City is now under the management of Shaffer & Dinger; the former, Gus H. Shaffer, is superintendent of the steel car department at the car factory. Mr. Dinger is an experienced theatrical man of Chicago.

The American Seating Company, of Chicago, has obtained the contract for the installation of the seats in the new Temple theatre at Mishawaka, where the work is being rapidly pushed to complete the theatre. Every attention will be paid to the ventilation of the building.

Holwager's former Little Grand theatre, at Madison, which has been remodeled throughout, was re-opened Thursday evening, December 8. The theatre has been constructed of fireproof materials, mostly concrete and structural iron, from the basement to the roof. The theatre has a seating capacity of nearly 800 persons.

It was announced recently that the Bastian Realty Company would erect a motion picture theatre at 1830 Central avenue, Indianapolis. The amusement house will be leased to Walter O. Rouse, who will operate it. A building permit fixing the cost at $6,000 was issued.

By the incorporation of the Gem Theatre Company, Indiana Harbor, for $10,000, and the purchase of five theatres by the new company, the "moving picture war" at Indiana Harbor where five moving picture and vaudeville theatres have been waging a war for two months, at a cost of an average of $100 a week to each manager, has been ended. The theatres were giving patrons more and charging less than any theatres in Indiana.

The Pictureland, Family, Liberty, Gem and Columbia theatres were bought by Julius Nassau, N. T. Dochea and A. I. Engel. All but two of the theatres, the Family and Columbia, will be closed.

Paul Bumanovich, of the Pictureland, A. Berkson, of the Family, L. W. Sarica, of the Liberty, and Rinpinger Brothers, of the Columbia, go out of business through the deal. The public is now

PLAY SAFE

When you buy a motion picture machine, get a tried and proven projector—one that is easy to operate—one that will give you just as perfect service six and seven years after installation as on the first night used—one that will go through years of hard service with practically no repairs, no breakdowns, no projection troubles of any kind.

The machine that lives up to the above requirements is the MASTER MODEL, the projector that satisfies the exhibitor, the operator, and the public.

Write for new circular describing the MASTER MODEL.

VELVET GOLD FIBRE SCREENS

With the Soft Velvet Finish

PRODUCE PERFECTLY PROJECTED PICTURES

Manufactured by

L. J. Gardiner, 154 Woodward Ave., Detroit, Michigan

I named this curtain the "Velvet Gold Fibre" as it brings out the soft warm velvet tones of the photography, instead of the harsh glare caused by the contrast of the high lights against the dead black of the deep shadows which have given pictures heretofore a flat, chalky and sooty appearance, losing the depth of perspective. With this velvet finish we have eliminated all eye-strain and make your front seats as desirable as any in the house. Added to this we have increased your illumination fully 100%. paying ten and fifteen cents for moving pictures, instead of seven reels of pictures for five cents.

Vaudeville, which has been given at three of the theatres, has been discontinued.

Dr. T. Armfield, who is building a new theatre at Elwood, has been notified by the city authorities of Elwood, that the front of his theatre extends fifteen inches on the city property. It has been discovered that several other buildings on the same street extend an equal distance on the city property and Dr. Armfield has gone ahead with his building, notifying the city authorities that if any steps are taken to stop him, he will file suit against the owners of every building on the street that extends over the city property line.

The old post office corner at Mishawaka has been leased for five years by O. J. Lembrotte, of Crawfordsville, who expects to remodel the building and open a first class picture show with a seating capacity of 500, modeled after the LaSalle theatre at South Bend. The theatre will have a balcony. Mr. Lembrotte will charge ten cents admission.

James E. Hankins and James E. Stewart have bought the moving picture theatre at English, formerly operated by N. E. Gobbel and Guy Longest. The new owners put on the first show recently to a well filled house.

The Dreamland theatre at Muncie, which started under the management of Jordan Brothers recently, has been closed because of differences between the owner, Mrs. Anna Newbauer and the new managers.

The New Irvin theatre at Winchester has been leased by John Day, a well known theatre man of Muncie. The name of the theatre has been changed to the Orpheum.

The Ideal theatre at Kokomo reopened Saturday, November 27, after being closed ten days, under the name of the Cort theatre, under the management of R. K. Mosiman, of Elwood. The theatre has been redecorated since it was closed.

Dana Hoch, proprietor of a theatre at Mulberry, has added 200 new seats to his theatre.

Ten cents is now being charged for feature pictures at the Majestic theatre, Lagrange.

The Imp theatre, at Terre Haute, which recently was bought by Charles Cummins from Arthur Collins, will reopen under the name of the Palm theatre,

A new screen is being added and the interior of the theatre is being remodeled.

A motion picture machine has been bought by the Presbyterian church at Warsaw, and a picture entertainment will be given at least once a week.

LOUISIANA

The Pass Time theatre, Alexandria, has been closed for extensive improvements.

Work of remodelling the Grand theatre, Donaldsonville, has been begun by a New Orleans architect. Two Powers machines and a Wurlitzer orchestra have been ordered.

James Von Lotten has taken over the Happy Hour Theatre in Donaldsonville and will open it shortly as a moving picture house.

At a cost of $1,000, the Columbia theatre, Baton Rouge has installed two new projection machines.

Fire, caused by the ignition of a moving picture film in the Dixie theatre, Crichton, on the afternoon of November 29, destroyed the theatre and six adjoining buildings. The loss was estimated at $20,000, with practically no insurance.

The Triangle Program opened at the Hippodrome theatre, Shreveport, La., recently.

MAINE

Frank A. Owen, for many years manager of Bangor Opera House, Bangor, and David Owen, have taken the management of the Orono theatre, which they have already opened.

The Strand, Gardiner's new theatre, opened its doors to the public recently. Ernest J. Keller, who for many years managed the Gardner Opera House, has leased the theatre for a term of years.

MARYLAND

The Gordon Realty Company will erect a $12,000 moving-picture theatre on the southeast corner of Baltimore and Catherine streets, Baltimore. It will be of brick, 87.7 by 117.7 feet, one story high, and will contain four stories besides the theatre. H. C. Aiken is the architect.

Extensive improvements are being undertaken to the Gem Motion Picture Parlor, 714 East Baltimore street, Baltimore.

A moving-picture theatre at 2804 Pennsylvania avenue, Baltimore, is planned by S. Raith, who will take bids on the construction of the building after securing the requisite franchise.

A moving-picture theatre, with a seating capacity for 500, will be opened in the near future at Towson.

MICHIGAN

The contractors of the new Ferry Field theatre, Grand River, and the Boulevard, Detroit, have assured the owners that they can have the playhouse by March 1. There will be 1,500 seats. A. Arthur Caille is president of the company. It is capitalized for $100,000.

A. Arthur Caille and Henry J. Guthard, who now operate the Majestic and Fine Arts theatres in Detroit, and the Metro Film Corporation, Michigan branch, have formally taken over the Marx theatre in Wyandotte. It will be completely redecorated and remodeled, and new equipment installed. Messrs. Caille and Guthard recently took over the Majestic in Wyandotte, which is to be an exact duplicate—only smaller—of the Majestic in Detroit. This means it will have the amphitheatre style of seating.

Fred La Vound has been appointed manager of the Grand Circus theatre, 301 Woodward avenue, Detroit, succeeding F. A. Pelley.

R. J. Crosbie has again leased the Crystal theatre, Sturgis, from Thad and Paul Wait.

August Kliest and his son, Julius Kliest, have let contracts for the erection of a $50,000 theatre in Pontiac. The definite policy of the new house has not been decided, although it is believed that it will be a combination of vaudeville and photoplays.

Detroit's newest theatre, the Duplex, Woodward avenue and the Grand Boulevard, opened Thursday evening, December 15. Manager Earl Hennessy has signed up for first run rights on Pathé Gold Rooster films. The Duplex seats 1,500 people, 750 in each auditorium.

E. V. McGrath has resigned as manager of the Maxine theatre, Mack and Baldwin avenues, Detroit, to assume the management of the new Stratford theatre, Dix and Ferdinand avenues, which is being erected, and which will be completed not later than February 1. Frank C. Glick succeeds Mr. McGrath at the Maxine.

The Atheneum theatre, Jackson, has been taken over by new people, and will be known after January 1 as the Majestic theatre. The new owners consist of Wirt S. McLaren, who will be the house manager, William F. Phillips and Charles Ulrickson. A fund of $25,000 is to be set aside for remodeling and improvements. It will reopen after the first of the year as a picture house. The new operators will do business as the Majestic Company, and will also control the Colonial theatre on the East Side. Mr. McLaren has for some time been manager of the Colonial; in fact he opened this house a year ago.

MISSOURI

Meyer Brothers & Pracht, who have been operating the Knickerbocker theatre at 3145 Park avenue, St. Louis, since it was built six years ago, sold the house on December 2 to Sterling and Kepta. The Knickerbocker is a very popular theatre in the Park avenue district, and is connected with a large airdome next door. Meyer Brothers & Pracht operate the Shaw theatre at Shaw avenue and 39th street.

The Majestic theatre, Collinsville and St. Louis avenues, East St. Louis, has been treated to a new front, and an effective new electric sign, by Manager Redmon. The Majestic seats 1,100 persons. Mr. Redmon believes in advertising, and employs an energetic press agent by the name of John Choate to see that well written publicity reaches the public.

Martin and Estes, formerly lessees of the Empress theatre in Kansas City, have purchased the interest of Hugh Tighe in the Willis Wood, one of the largest theatres in that city. Henry Lappe, and Martin and Estes are now the controllers of the house. H. O. Martin will be the manager, and he will have the assistance of Joseph Gildey, who has been with the house since it was opened as a picture theatre.

A building permit has been issued to the Regent Theatre Company for the erection of a motion picture theatre at 107-9 East 12th street, in Kansas City. It is to cost $25,000.

J. T. Rader, of Platte City, has received the contract for the erection of a motion picture theatre at Tarkio, for Taylor and Hackett.

D. W. Agnew and H. J. Greene have bought the Lyric theatre, Bozeman.

A moving picture theatre will be erected by J. M. Rantschler and W. C. Bernard, at Harlem. The building will be one story, 32 x 100 feet.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

Herbert Sharp, of Berwick, is placing a picture theatre on the second floor of the Davis and Clark building, Sullivan square.

H. Robinson is fitting up the Armory building, Central street, Newport, for use as a motion picture theatre.

NEW JERSEY

Chas. C. Hildinger and Philip Papier, owners of theatres in Trenton, Lambertville and Doylestown are erecting an 800 seat house in Flemington.

Milton A. Labaw, of Somerville, has been granted a license to operate a moving picture theatre in the building now in course of erection for that purpose, on the north side of Main street, near the Bound Brook National Bank, Bound Brook.

NEW YORK

The new Madison theatre, located in the fine residential section of Pine Hills, Albany, was opened to the public November 17. It is to be run on practically the same hours as the other theatres of the better class in Albany. The theatre has a seating capacity of 1,000. It played to capacity business on Thanksgiving day. J. C. Green is owner of the theatre, which is being managed by F. R. Billman. There was a good deal of opposition to the theatre when it was first suggested, but now that it has opened it seems to have already become popular.

Gronenberg & Leuchtag have completed plans for a moving picture theatre and stores to be erected at the northeast corner of Fordham road and the Concourse, New York City, by the Fordham Road Corporation, Irving Judis, president, who has leased the theatre section through M. & L. Hess to the Concourse Theatre Company for a long term of years at an aggregate rental of $75,000.

Fire Marshal William Haynes of Troy has issued a permit to Weinstein Brothers to alter a building in King street for use as a motion picture theatre.

Another theatre will be erected in Birmingham. The building inspector has granted a permit to Hider Brothers to erect a moving picture theatre at 190 Clinton street. The building is to be of concrete and tile and capable of seating 600. It will cost $7,000.

N. R. Robinson, of Ocean, who conducted the New Dreamland moving picture house on North Union street until some months ago, has rented the opera house at Fillmore and is putting it into shape for the exhibition of motion pictures.

William Gauthier, who for about eight years has conducted the motion picture theatre known as Wonderland at Gouverneur, has disposed of the property to William Lee and William Smith, two Gouverneur men.

Harry E. Faville and Frank L. Tvoe, of Dolgeville, have leased the theatre, which is being erected here by W. H. Faville, and which will be completed in a few weeks.

The new Ohmann theatre in Lyons was opened to the public recently. This building, which was built for Ohmann Brothers, of Lyons, at a cost of $20,000, will be used as a straight picture theatre.

The plans for the moving picture theatre, which will be erected in the West End on North Swan street, Albany, have been approved by the city building department. The building will cost $15,000 when completed.

OKLAHOMA

William Smith, owner of the Empress theatre at Tulsa, is to erect a vaudeville and picture house that will seat 1,400 in that city.

Music and the Picture

Edited by Ernst Luz

This department is maintained for the exhibitor's assistance with a view of suggesting proper musical illustrations for current photo plays. MOTION PICTURE NEWS will be pleased to help solve any difficulties the exhibitors may have with their musical programs. All communications should be addressed to the Music and the Picture Department.

FAILS TO AGREE THAT MUSICIANS CAN BEST PLAY TO PICTURES FROM PRINTED MUSIC

Fred Sloope, Jr., Steubenville, Ohio.—I have read the MOTION PICTURE NEWS since its inception and I like it.

However, I disagree with you on your article in Vol. 12, No. 22, in which you say that the pictures can be played to as well and synchronized as completely from printed music as by improvisation.

Your assertion is not borne out by those who are recognized as first class moving picture musicians. On page 47 of the same issue, Mr. Rothapfel says that one good pianist is better than a poor thirty piece orchestra, if the pianist interprets the pictures.

Having played some years ago at the Beacon Theatre, Boston, I was in a position to watch the work of the picture musicians in that musical center. Those who improvised were considered the leaders.

Frank J. Hassett, for years Lyman H. Howe's leading musician, and known as possibly the greatest film musician in America, is an extemporaneous player. He built up his reputation by improvising and thereby effecting wonderful synchronization.

As for myself, I am at all times striving to improve myself in the art of improvisation, as I realize that the musician who will have the call in the future, will be the fellow who can extemporize on any style of music.

I am employed in a "regular" theatre by "regular" fellows who have given me the tools to work with. We have two pianos, a Bartola and pipe organ. We have a Celesta coming in a few weeks.

Your enthusiasm highly interests me and I am gratified to note that you are a thorough reader of the NEWS. In the article you mention I was citing facts wherewith the student or advanced musician can adapt his musical knowledge to the playing of pictures. There are 15,000 picture players needed at least and while you may have succeeded by extemporaneous playing to entertain an audience, I know of many who have made very miserable attempts. I would refer you to an article of mine in Vol. 12, No. 3, the issue of July 24, on improvisation.

Your letter may be misleading, but it leads me to believe that you play only in extemporaneous manner or by improvisation. If you can do this entertainingly for an entire picture performance, you are to be highly congratulated, for of the many hundreds that I have heard, I can number those that I know capable of this on the fingers of my one hand.

We must not confuse the playing of a memorized repertoire of music as extemporaneous or improvisation. The cry of the picture audience is to have the player play something and they do desire to hear things familiar at times. I feel sure that upon second thought you will find that you as well as all other successful picture players do find more opportunities for playing good standard music than improvisation, since feature pictures have become a vogue, for good music is a great addition to the feature picture.

I shall never admit that any player can extemporaneously create a theme or musical number that will please, when it is a known fact that our good musical compositions have required months of thought and preparation before they were considered ready to give to the public. With the musical equipment that you have, you should get wonderful results out of good music and at the same time be able to give your music excellent picture illustration. You cite instances of a few years ago, which I cannot contradict, but everything, not only music, is entirely different today and still changing. I know for a fact that Lyman H. Howe's shows of today, of which there are six companies on the road every season, are rehearsed to the smallest detail and are always produced that way.

Rehearsals do away with everything that might be considered extemporaneous. I agree with what you quote from Mr. Rothapfel's article as to a poor orchestra, but the answer is that Mr. Rothapfel always uses a good thirty piece orchestra. He knows a good orchestra from a poor one, consequently never uses a pianist. My article in MOTION PICTURE NEWS on July 24 I feel sure would interest you and meet with your approval, for I am sure that you partly misunderstood my meaning in Vol. 12, No. 22.

Don't stop your studies on improvisation, for when properly accomplished it is an art, but "Stop, Look and Listen" and you will find that everything we improvise can be found in music and improvisation in picture playing is valuable only to supply the want of preparedness.

When each picture is supplied with a music plot or musical suggestions of non-dictatorial ideas, improvisation will slowly fade away.

Play music as much as you can and you will be able to do great work with your Bartola, pipe organ and Celesta.

If you cannot locate or get the issue of July 24, let me know and I will send you a copy. Unless otherwise stated my articles are not written for the pianist or one-man instrument player alone, but for the help of the one-man or thirty-men orchestra.

LYRIC, MINNEAPOLIS' LARGEST THEATRE, NOW HOME OF TRIANGLE PLAYS

THE Lyric theatre, Minneapolis, for more than three years managed by Saxe brothers, proprietors of the Strand, has changed hands and is now known as the "home of the Triangle plays."

The lease was purchased by A. G. Bainbridge, Jr., manager of the Shubert theatre, who is now running "The Birth of a Nation," after taking his stock company to another theatre. The Lyric is the largest picture theatre in the city and will give the best productions that can be obtained.

Associated with Mr. Bainbridge are John Elliott, manager of the Unique theatre and Harry A. Sherman. The latter two men have the northwestern rights for "The Birth of a Nation."

The admission for night performances will range from 10 cents to 25 cents while the afternoon prices will be 10 cents for any seat in the house.

The new management took control December 5 and has been doing an excellent business since that date.

"SPOTLIGHT WALTZ" FEATURES ANNUAL BALL OF HOUSTON OPERATORS

THE first annual ball of the Houston (Texas) moving picture operators was held at the City Auditorium in that city on the night of November 24.

From all accounts the initial event was a huge success, and patronized by 500 people. The feature of the evening was a "spotlight waltz," in which the "spot" followed the dancers.

BODINE PATTERN ENLARGES QUARTERS

THE BODINE PATTERN CO., 817 Market St., St. Louis, under the guidance of J. R. Bodine, have enlarged their quarters one hundred per cent in space and greatly increased their staff.

This concern makes a specialty of manufacturing special frames for motion picture theatres. Their latest equipment was placed at the Cinderella Theatre, Down Town Lyric and the West End Lyric, St. Louis.

PROPOSED CHANGE IN VANCOUVER LICENSE FEES DEFERRED FOR THREE MONTHS

THE Vancouver City Council, after two sessions at which the proposed change in the scale of license fees to be paid by Vancouver picture theatres was discussed, voted to lay the matter over for three months.

This decision virtually favored the downtown picture men who were opposed to a change.

Trade License Inspector Jones, in devising new rates, designed to bring into the city treasury about $3,000 yearly, recommended a sliding scale, with a fee based on seating capacity.

It was proposed to charge theatres seating three hundred or less, $100 per year, instead of the present flat rate of $150, and to add twenty-five cents per year for every seat over three hundred in the larger houses. This, however, would mean a considerable raise for some of the downtown theatres, and would increase the fee of one of them to $257.75, or over $100 more than the present rate. The multiplicity of amendments and counter-propositions brought up finally induced the council to lay the matter over until the next session.

At this session were present W. P. Dewees of the Rex theatre, James Pilling of the Orpheum, J. R. Muir of the Dominion, and W. P. Nichols of the National Amusement Company, to protest against a change; and W. W. Armstrong of the Fairview, and G. Corriveau, Jr., of the Grandview, in favor of the new schedule. The downtown managers drew attention to the difference in the expense of conducting the two types of theatres, and stated that all houses are now being operated at a loss. While their investment amounts to perhaps $50,000 or $75,000, that of a small suburban house may be only $5,000; film costs about $300 or $400 per week, as against about $50 for the small theatres; expenses for the large houses range about $125 to $150 per day, compared with $25 for a suburban house, and rents are $500 to $1,000 or more per month, as compared with about $125.

Buffalo, N. Y., Dec. 11.

THE Triangle films opened in Buffalo on Sunday, December 5, when the first subjects of this brand were presented at the Palace theatre. Other local theatres which will present Triangle films are the New Victoria, Regent, Marlowe and Ellen Terry theatres. There has been much speculation in Buffalo as to which theatre would get these productions and rumors have said that almost every leading house would show them.

The announcement that the Palace would present them came as a surprise to many local exhibitors who expected that they would surely go to another large downtown house.

FEASTER MACHINES INSTALLED IN FOUR NEW YORK THEATRES

AMONG the numerous theatres equipped with the Feaster no-rewind system during the past week are the new Ideal, Eighth avenue and Forty-sixth street, New York City; the Regent, on Third avenue; the Morningside theatre, One Hundred and Forty-seventh street and Broadway; and the Hamilton, Hamilton and Hicks streets, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Music Notes.—This picture has wonderful musical opportunities, giving the player full sway in playing a varied program of music holding a heavy dramatic tone throughout. The picture is full of dramatic color which should be accentuated by melodramatic numbers as suggested in plot.

The diabolical scenes Nos. 27-28-29-30-31 and 32 are excellently illustrated by the A. B. C. Dramatic Music, Set 10, which if properly played, will give the impression of an overture written to fit such diabolical scenes. These numbers sold by Jos. W. Stern, 102 West 38th street, New York City.

No. 1 should be a light intermezzo suggesting the polka. No. 2 a light, lively musical waltz. No. 3 should be a slow number giving a semi-serious suggestion. Nos. 5-6-17-18 must be slow legato numbers with positive romantic or pathetic appeal as designated.

Nos. 4 and 16 must be very light galops, suggesting hurried action only. No. 7 should be a decided Dutch or German waltz. Must be light. Nos. 7-8-9-11 and 13 accompany dances on screen. Nos. 8-11 and 13 are intermezzo trots, as are used for dancing. No. 9 should be a light caprice, often used in ballet dances. Nos. 10 and 33 are very slow waltz lento movements played strictly legato. Nos. 15 and 23 are slow numbers with a positive dramatic effect superseding the pathetic tone. No. 19 should be a light polka, suggesting children at play. Nos. 24 and 26 should be a religious processional played very piano and slow. Must be in 4/4 time. The same number can be used twice. No. 25 should be a light waltz lento movement. Accompanies the dancing of angels. No. 34 should be a lively 2/4 intermezzo-trot suggesting a street carnival.

This is not an easy picture to be played on the organ. However, Nos. 5-6-10-15-17-18-23-24 and 26 are very good for organ.

The diabolical scenes Nos. 27-28-29-30-31 and 32 can also be worked up to good advantage on the organ.

National Advertising and the Theatre Program

A VERY attractive and quite general discussion has been aroused by our editorial of December 18, called "A Big Look Ahead."

This editorial was inspired by the recent convention in New York of the Association of National Advertisers, at which the subject of national advertising through the theatre program was seriously broached.

A variety of opposition to the editorial has developed.

THE most strenuous naturally comes from the advertising managers of several popular magazines who object mightily to the suggestion that the public has left the evening reading lamp for the motion picture theatre.

In my own opinion this is not only true to a large extent, but in another year will be doubly true.

A PROMINENT distributor gives two objections to an advertising section on the theatre program. He calls attention to the fact that picture shows are continuous and that the patron will object who walks in at an odd moment and faces a series of advertisements. He also says that the picture business does not need advertising support—any part, in other words, of the six hundred million dollars now spent annually in advertising.

As to the first, it is a fact that more and more picture programs are run at definite hours, and more and more the public is learning this fact; also the advertising section can and must be made as interesting as the body of the program, just as is true of magazine advertising today.

AS to the picture business not needing advertising support, I am not so sure. As the public taste grows more critical and competition in production grows keener—both of which future conditions we must face—the business of making and showing pictures is going to need some extra financial support very badly.

Exhibitors who have written in are as one in stating that screen advertising has no place in a first class house. I imagine these exhibitors have in mind their own home-made slides rather than the remarkable possibilities of film advertisements upon which as much genius and money will be expended per foot as upon the best feature pictures.

AN excellent reply to these exhibitors is contained in the following paragraphs of a letter received from a man who has evidently studied the subject seriously. The writer, by the way, closes his letter by stating that one national advertiser has already made an appropriation of $150,000, for advertising through motion pictures in 1916.

The writer says:

"Within the last few days I told one of my friends, who is an exhibitor, that I believed the time would come when the advertising receipts in his house would more than pay all his overhead expenses. I believe it will go even farther than that eventually.

"IT will take time to organize the proposition properly. At present there are many of the leading theatres who say "No advertising for mine," assuming that they are too high class to make use of advertising. Could you imagine the Century Magazine or Harper's or World's Work, or Scribner's, or even Life, making such statements? Yet they go right into the home, and advertising is what puts them into the home at the price it does.

"There is nothing today in the moving picture business like the Saturday Evening Post, yet the Saturday Evening Post is only made possible by advertising.

"IS it too much to expect that some day the program so far beyond that which we see today will be shown in our moving picture houses at a profit to the exhibitor, largely due to the fact that much of the cost sustained in the distribution and production of the picture was assumed by national advertisers and local advertisers?

"The great trouble is that too many of our moving picture friends try to make the moving picture business the same thing that the theatrical business is. It is so vastly different that some of them will begin to wake up when they find they have a merchandising proposition, which is more like selling any other trade marked line than it is like a Shubert production or a Frohman production."

The greatest obstacle to the advancement of the motion picture today, both as an art and as an industry, is due to the fact that we insist, as the writer points out, upon confounding the picture with the stage.

THE picture is not the stage—nor a substitute for, nor a duplication of, nor a destroyer of the stage. It is a new institution, a new art, wholly apart from the stage. It is the fifth estate—another vehicle of expression more potent in many ways than the fourth estate of printing and all other modes of expression which have preceded it in the world's progress.

The stage and its past are a part of the motion picture's material—but comparatively a very small part. The big developments, the astonishing departures which the future has in store for the motion picture—will, in my opinion, compete much more closely with the art of printing than with the traditions of the stage.

SO much for the art of picture; as for the business of the stage and the business of the picture there is still less connection. The theatrical business never was a business. It has always been and still is—a gamble.

The distribution and exhibition of pictures, however, is as everyone must know, a matter quite largely of merchandising. It is like the distribution and sale of magazines and newspapers. It is utterly unlike the stage.

The producer is beginning to realize these facts. It is now time for the exhiibtor to think about them.

William A. Johnston.

"The Open Season" on Motion Pictures

WITH the beginning of the present Congressional session, the "open season" on motion picture for the legislative hunters may be said to be on.

As fast as the legislatures which are scheduled to deliberate this year assemble, preparations will be made to scare up flocks of exhibitors and exchange men from their coverts and take pot-shots at them with measures and bills.

AT the close of the last season, the motion picture man, after having been hunted enthusiastically from cover to cover, had grown so wild that he fled at the sight of anything that looked like a politician.

That, of course, has happened before. But the sequel has always hitherto been, unfortunately, that a few months' respite made him as tame as ever and as fair a mark for the law-making huntsmen.

WILL his memory be as disastrously short this winter as it has been in past years? There is no excuse for such a thing. The several narrow escapes the industry had a year ago from suffocating censorship laws ought to have left a recollection that would require more than a few months to efface.

This winter should tell a different story. If anything was needed as an antidote to indifference, there is the Federal censorship measure, which Congressman Hughes of Georgia has just re-introduced into the House.

THE bill can be defeated. But it cannot be done by passing resolutions, or by "passing the buck" to some small coterie of individuals who may be willing, but will be quite unable, to accomplish the task themselves.

The utmost efforts of the strongest and most influential men in the business, exerted largely through their personal appearance before the members of the House committee will be needed to make any impression upon Congressmen who, through no fault of their own, have heard but one side of the question.

The Board of Trade Demonstrates Its Efficiency

ALREADY the Motion Picture Board of Trade is demonstrating its ability to bring things to pass for the benefit of the industry.

It persuaded the General Welfare Committee of the New York Board of Aldermen to table an ordinance, one of whose provisions would have prohibited stages or scenery in motion picture theatres.

If this provision had become law, as members of the Board of Trade pointed out at the hearing, theatres like the Strand and the Vitagraph, as well as hundreds of other larger houses, would be obliged to tear out their stages. Thus the setting so necessary to the proper presentation of pictures would have been destroyed.

THE Board of Trade is to be congratulated upon this effective piece of work. If such a prohibition had been laid upon theatres in New York, who knows how many other cities would have been seized with a mania for this new kind of regulation?

The Dawn of Co-operation

SINCE Motion Picture News started twelve weeks ago, its campaign to win the newspapers to the cause of the photoplay, the word co-operation has appeared frequently.

IT is one thing to talk about co-operation, and another to co-operate. Co-operation may be held as a beautiful theory, or realized as an accomplished fact.

It cannot be lifted from the realm of theory to the plane of fact without ingenuity, hard work, and concession, on the part of newspaper and exhibitor alike. Ideas are required, first; and then action, a process which will bring forth such genuine co-operation as this:

"THE information bureau at 'Ledger Central' for the use of the public as well as the exhibitor supplies full data upon all subjects pertaining to the industry. Exhibitors are furnished blanks for the week's program similar to those furnished by the exchanges; return envelopes and other similar matter."

THAT is one of many angles of actual co-operation employed by the Philadelphia Evening Ledger, as told in last week's News by P. R. Plough, the Ledger photoplay editor. It shows, among other things, that the Ledger not only wants to co-operate, but does.

Federal Theatre War Tax Is in Force One Year More

President Signs Re-enactment Measure from Congress—Hughes, of Georgia, Introduces National Censorship Bill, Vaguely Worded in Everything Except the Jobs in Sight for Place Hunters and the Salaries the Sinecures Will Bring—Cost to Maintain the Board Might Come to $40,000 a Year

Special to Motion Picture News

Washington, D. C., Dec. 18.

FROM the present outlook, the Sixty-fourth Congress will go down into history as one which will have effected or have endeavored to effect most disastrous legislation pertaining to the motion picture industry.

The session was but a few hours old when its members were called upon to pass a joint resolution continuing the so-called war emergency revenue act which places a tax on theatres and other places of amusement according to the seating capacity, and which is so full of discriminations against the motion picture houses as to make it almost unbelievable that an intelligent body of men should seek to accomplish such legislation.

In endeavoring to whip his fellow members of the majority into line to push through this measure, Mr. Kitchin, the majority leader, said: "We Democrats know, of course, that this bill is unpopular. We know that no tax is popular in times of peace.

"It is impossible to write a bill that will appeal to the judgment and gain the approval of any man, but the country placed this Government and its finances in the control of the Democratic party. The necessity exists to raise a certain amount of revenue.

"The deficits are there, and I believe that we would be unworthy of the record of the Democrats under this administration if we did not have the courage and the patriotism to do the unpopular thing, and arrange sufficient revenues to meet the absolute necessities of the Government."

Five Democrats voted with the Republicans in the House of Representatives in the effort to limit the bill to cover a period of less than that which is intended. The majority party pushed it through, to remain in effect until December 31, 1916, by just sixteen votes.

The bill also passed the Senate and the President placed his signature on the measure, making it a law, which the exhibitors will have to endure for another twelve months.

Provisions of Hughes Bill

While the tax upon theatres may be decidedly distasteful and will remain in the memory of exhibitors for many moons, its provisions are as nothing compared with those of the bill which Mr. Hughes, of Georgia, has "condescended" to reintroduce at this session, probably at the request of the reformers who are seeking a record this year.

It is "to create a new division in the Bureau of Education, to be known as the Federal Motion Picture Commission, and defining its powers and duties."

The bill is known as H. R. 456. It is a masterpiece with respect to the opportunities offered for the distribution of choice positions to five commissioners, four of whom are to receive $3,500 per annum, while the remaining member as chairman will receive $4,000, and section 4 provides "That the commission may appoint deputy commissioners and other assistants and to fix the compensation of each."

Actual and necessary traveling expenses shall be allowed to those who travel on the business of the commission. The commission shall be provided with necessary office furniture, stationery, supplies, projecting machines, and appliances necessary for inspection of films and for manufacture of film seals.

Continuing, the section provides "That the entire cost of the commission, including salaries and all other expenses, except the cost of manufacturing seals, which is otherwise provided for, shall not exceed $40,000 a year."

Six-Year Terms for Job Holders

Patronage, as job-giving in the parlance of the Capitol is known, offered by this measure is very desirable, for section 2 provides "That each commissioner shall hold office for six years, except that when the commission is first constituted two commissioners shall be appointed for two years, two for four years and one for six years.

"Each commissioner shall thereafter be appointed for a full term of six years, except that any person appointed to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member whom he shall succeed."

The proposed law gives the commission the power to appoint advisory commissioners to advise and assist in the examination and censoring of films.

They would hold office during the pleasure of the proposed Federal commission.

The trade, however, will not be called upon to support this auxiliary force, for Mr. Hughes has provided that these shall serve without compensation.

Section 5, providing for the licensing of films, contains the following clause: "The commission may, by unanimous vote, withdraw any license at any time for cause shown."

Phraseology of Bill Vague

The law would tell the commissioners what they can do, but there is very little limitation placed on their proposed activities. They may license every film submitted to them and intended for entrance into interstate commerce, unless it finds that such film is obscene, indecent, immoral, inhuman, or depicts a bull fight or a prize fight, or is of such a character that its exhibiton would tend to impair the health or corrupt the morals of children or adults or incite to crime.

The issue is dodged as to what obscene, indecent, and the other terms may mean. The whole proposition to the exhibitor appears to be that five men, augmented perhaps by deputies and advisors, are to place their judgment in competition with the millions of people of the country who are devotees of pictures.

Congress will allow the commission $40,000 per annum. There is already an enormous deficit in the Treasury and the people would hardly stand for the expenses of such an organization to be paid from the public fund, if there were such a thing existing elsewhere than in the minds of the present administrating officers.

So, section 12 provides "That a fee of one dollar shall be charged for the examination by the commission of each film of one thousand feet or less ,and fifty cents for each film which is a duplicate of any film which has been licensed."

Nothing is said in the bill as to where the principal offices of the commission will be located.

If in Washington, for the commission is to form the new division of the Bureau of Education in the Department of the Interior, the manufacturers will have the pleasure of paying express rates between their places of film manufacture and that city.

Imposing Red Tape Before Release

Added to this is the cost of the seals, which are to be attached to such films as may be licensed by the commission.

When a film has been approved, the commission will issue a certificate describing it, bearing a serial number and stating the title, the day upon which it was approved as well as the number of linear feet it contains.

No person, firm, or corporation shall carry or transport any film in interstate or foreign commerce unless such film has been licensed and a true copy of the certificate accompanies it.

Section 14 provides "That the penalty for violation of this Act shall be a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment not more than one year, or both, in the discretion of the court, and the films unlawfully changed, exhibited, or transported shall be confiscated."

"EXCUSE ME," PATHE RELEASE FOR DECEMBER 31

"Excuse Me," the film adaption of Rupert Hughes' farce which ran for two Broadway seasons is the Pathé Gold Rooster release for December 31.

This is the first of a series of Broadway successes which are being produced by Henry W. Savage for the Pathé Gold Rooster program.

The scene of "Excuse Me" is aboard a coast to coast Pullman. The majority of the merriment in "Excuse Me" is furnished by that often abused but highly respected ornament of travel—the Pullman Porter, played by George F. Marion, who is supported by a capable cast including Robert Fischer, J. B. Hollis, Vivian Blackburn and many other fun makers.

George F. Marion is equally well-known both as a stage director and actor. Vivian Blackburn will be remembered for her excellent work in "Everywoman" and with John Drew in "Jack Straw." She was the original Fencing Girl.

GAUMONT PICKS VERNOT FOR DIRECTOR STAFF

Gaumont announces the engagement of Henry J. Vernot as a director of one of the Masterpicture edition de luxe companies. Mr. Vernot returns to the company which brought him to America. In 1911-12 he was a director of a Gaumont company, a position he had occupied before this with the same corporation in Paris. In 1912 he went to the Eclair Company, leaving that concern a year later to direct for Pathé.

It is the intention of the Gaumont Company to maintain four directors for its organizations making Mutual Masterpictures, edition de luxe. Mr. Vernot will devote his entire attention to the company which will feature Marguerite Courtot. This little star will leave for the Gaumont winter quarters at Jacksonville, Fla., on Christmas Day.

Mr. Vernot has directed some of the most popular pictures ever released in America, and his return to Gaumont gives him ample opportunity to display his skill in the direction of big features. The first Mutual Masterpicture, edition de luxe, in which he will direct Miss Courtot will be released in February.

MILWAUKEE LEAGUE INCORPORATES

Special to Motion Picture News

Milwaukee, Dec. 16.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors Association of this city, organized without capital stock, has been incorporated.

The purpose of the association as stated in the papers is to uplift the moral standard of the business of the exhibitors of Milwaukee, to promote the business interests of the exhibitors and to maintain a strictly neutral attitude with respect to film manufacturers.

The incorporators are: Henry Trinz, George Fischer, Phillip O. Gross, Jr., Paul Langheinrich, Sr., Otto Anders, Richard Laufer, Otto Preusser, Sr., B. K. Fischer, Charles Phillipps, J. H. Fillman and H. D. Graham.

Ancient History for Huge Triangle Masterpieces?

Los Angeles Colony Agog with Rumors of Multiple Reels to Be Produced by Griffith and Ince with Epoch-Making Events of By-Gone Days as Basis

Special to Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Dec. 16.

INTERESTING rumors—though they lack confirmation from official sources—are going the rounds of the film colony here, regarding a series of huge special masterpieces which may issue from the Triangle studios within the limits of 1916.

Out of the mass of conflicting statements which are to be heard concerning these multiple spectacles, one is able to glean that they will each be based upon some epoch-making event of ancient history.

One story is that this series will include the life and death of Sardanapalus, the Assyrian monarch who, after a life of unparalleled profligacy and extravagance, kindled a magnificent funeral pyre, heaped upon it all his treasures and plunged into the flames, followed by his favorite wife, to avoid falling into the hands of his enemies.

The fall of Babylon, in the days of Belshazzar, is said to be contemplated as a major subject for the series, as well as the story of Queen Zenobia, the woman ruler of Palmyra, who for years defied the Roman Empire and was at last conquered by the Emperor Aurelian; the biblical story of Esther; the life of Charlemagne; the Crusades and the Fall of Constantinople before the Turks.

Despite the fact that nobody in authority at the Fine Arts studio or Inceville will discuss these rumors, or treat them seriously, they persist in circulating through the colony. The name of D. W. Griffith has been mentioned in connection with them, as has also that of Thomas H. Ince.

It is said to be a fact that the prologue to "The Mother and the Law," which Mr. Griffith himself has been producing, contains scenes depicting the fall of Babylon. This may have given the idea for such a spectacle to Mr. Griffith, if the rumor is true; or, it may be the sole foundation for such a report.

At all events, ancient archaeology and history is reported to be a favorite topic of reading and discussion in high circles, at the Triangle studios, and all that the tale-bearers will say when asked for their authority, is: "Well, where there is so much smoke, there must be some fire."

Edison Withdraws from General Film Program

All Five-Reel Subjects Will Be Released Through the Kleine-Edison Service, Beginning with "The Blade o' Grass," "The Matchmakers" and "Celeste of the Ambulance Corps"

FOLLOWING close upon the announcement from the Edison Studio that they would reduce their output through the General Film Company to one three-reeler a week, comes the most recent one that Edison has withdrawn all releases through that company.

This new order of things applies to "Blade o' Grass," in which Leonie Flugrath and Pat O'Malley were to be featured; to "The Matchmakers," in which Sally Crute and William Wadsworth lead; to "Celeste of the Ambulance Corps," which the same players at "Blade o' Grass" and "The Duel."

This is contrary to the advertised announcements that have appeared, stating that these plays would be released through the General Film Company.

This leaves Edison releasing no films whatever through the General Film program, but the Edison studio will, as usual, devote itself to the production of five-reel features, released through the Kleine-Edison Feature Service.

Manager Leonard W. McChesney is silent on whether the studio would hereafter produce any shorter films than these five-reelers, and is also silent on the cause of the Edison withdrawal from General Film.

The Edison organization will, for the present, release two five-reel features, the next one being on January 12, "The Catspaw," in which Miriam Nesbitt and Marc MacDermott are featured, on January 26; "The Innocence of Ruth," in which Viola Dana and Edward Earle will star; on February 9, Mabel Trunnelle and Robert Conness in "The Crucifixion of Phillip Strong;" and Carroll McComas and Richard Tucker in "At the Rainbow's End," February 23.

The last release of the Edison studio through the General Film was "Santa Claus versus Cupid," on December 18, the final day of the old company as decreed by the court.

Lasky Re-engages Blanche Sweet for Long Term

Actress, Who Signed Contract That Contradicts Report of Her Leaving, Has Finished "The Ragamuffin," Scheduled for Release on January 17

THE Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company has re-engaged Blanche Sweet for a long term, according to announcement made this week by Samuel Goldfish, executive head of the company, on the eve of his starting for the Lasky studios at Hollywood, Cal.

Miss Sweet has just finished her latest Lasky photoplay, "The Ragamuffin," written and produced by William C. DeMille.

It will be released through Paramount Pictures Corporation on January 17, and will reveal Miss Sweet in the role of an urchin girl whose regeneration forms the basis of the theme.

The continuation of Miss Sweet's contract as one of the stars of the Lasky company puts a quietus on the reports and rumors that she was leaving the big producing firm.

This report was contradicted authoritatively a short time ago. It is stated that under the new arrangements of her engagement she will receive one of the biggest salaries in the film industry.

Blanche Sweet belongs to that small coterie who grew up into popularity with the industry. Ever since the motion picture first gained its intense and firm hold on the affection of the public Miss Sweet's name has been before the world.

Since she has been with the Lasky forces Miss Sweet has appeared in "The Warrens of Virginia," "The Captive," "The Clue," "Stolen Goods," "The Secret Orchard," "The Case of Becky," "The Secret Sin" and "The Ragamuffin," her latest photoplay.

Blanche Sweet had the benefit of an early training in motion pictures under D. W. Griffith. The first picture in which she was featured was "A Man with Three Wives," which scored a success.

Her most notable success under Mr. Griffith was in the title role of "Judith of Bethulia" and "The Escape."

LOCKWOOD IN PORTLAND, ORE., FOR SELIG-TRIBUNE WEEKLY

F. B. Lockwood, well known in Chicago film circles, leaves Sunday night for Portland, Ore., to cover the northern coast for the Selig-Tribune Weekly.

Blue Bird Formed to Release Weekly 5-Reelers

Company Plans to Enter Feature Production Field After First of Year—Sol. Berman Elected Temporary Head—Film and Stage Stars Will Appear in Pictures of the Firm—"Secret Love," Based on Mrs. Burnett's "Lass of Lowrie's," and Featuring Helen Ware, Is First Release, January 24.

A NEW organization will enter the feature field shortly after the New Year. This organization is the Blue Bird Photo Plays, Inc., engineered by several men who are numbered among the biggest in filmdom.

"We fully realize that the feature field is regarded by many individuals as being somewhat overcrowded," said one of the film magnates. "At the same time, here is one important fact which the people who are complaining of his condition are overlooking. The market for good features is not overcrowded—has never been, in fact.

"And because of this situation, Blue Bird Photo Plays, Inc., will occupy a field peculiarly its own. Quality, with a capital 'Q,' will be the outstanding feature of every one of our productions, or they will never be allowed to greet the photoplay patrons' eyes!"

Sol. Berman has been elected as temporary head of the new organization, and will shortly take up his new duties. There is probably no individual in the film field who is more familiar than Mr. Berman with the conditions obtaining in the motion picture industry.

His knowledge comes as the result of years of experience as solicitor, exchange manager and sales manager.

Weekly Releases Planned

The general policy of Blue Bird Photo Plays, Inc., will consist in presenting the world's most famous stars—this to include film stars as well as stars of the legitimate stage—in productions averaging five reels in length.

These subjects will be released at weekly intervals commencing with Monday, January 24. "Secret Love," based upon Frances Hodgeson Burnett's world-famous novel, "That Lass of Lowrie's," and featuring Helen Ware, will be the initial release.

Of particular interest is a statement made to the effect that the foremost of the foreign producers have asked for the privilege contributing the best of their efforts to the Blue Bird's program of releases.

As an example of what may be expected in this direction, "Jeanne Dore," "Rupert of Hentzau" and "The Shulamite," directed by George Tucker, the man who produced "Traffic in Souls," will be offered.

Blue Bird's galaxy of stars is a notable one. Besides Bernhardt in her latest dramatic success "Jeanne Dore," in six acts, Helen Ware and other players who have made stage history, will appear.

Overhead Charges Eliminated

J. Warren Kerrigan has made his last appearance in Universal subjects, and henceforth will be counted among the Blue Bird stars, and Hobart Bosworth is another player who will confine his activities to these subjects, as will Ella Hall, Lois Weber, Phillips Smalley and many others of equal popularity.

One of the advantages enjoyed by Blue Bird Photoplays, Inc., is its comparative freedom from the bugaboo besetting many other similar organizations—overhead expense in marketing its productions.

This is due to the fact that there will be but two exchanges maintained by that company in which only Blue Bird features will be handled.

One of these echanges will be located at 1600 Broadway, New York City, while the other will be located in Chicago.

The rest of the country will be supplied with these subjects through the medium of existing exchanges. Special arrangements with a large distributing organization have made this possible.

The following subjects give an idea of the first Blue Bird releases:

"Secret Love," featuring Helen Ware, and with a supporting cast consisting of such stars as Ella Hall, Harry Carey and Harry Carter, is to be the first release, as has already been stated.

The second five-reel subject will be "Undine," based upon the wonderfully dramatic mythological story by De La Motte Foque, and released Monday, January 31.

Ida Schnall, the noted diver, will enact the title role. In the supporting cast will be Douglas Gerrard and Edna Mason.

The February release will be "The Shulamite." Then comes Booth Tarkington's intensely dramatic story "The Flirt," produced by the Smalleys and featuring Marie Walcamp.

This subject will be issued on Monday, February 14.

"Jeanne Dore" follows, in which Sarah Bernhardt once more makes her bow to photoplay patrons. This subject will be released Monday, February 21.

One of the most important announcements issued by the new organization is to the effect that none of the film stars engaged by that company would be seen in productions other than those which are to be released on the Blue Bird program. This, because of the desire to protect the exhibitors showing these features. Mr. Berman made this point clear.

Carrol McComas Peers in Lens for Public Favor

Actress with Frohman 4 Years Will Make Her First Bid for Screen Popularity in "At the Rainbow's End," Edison 5-Reeler Scheduled for Release February 23

EDISON has captured for the star role of the Kleine-Edison five-part feature, "At the Rainbow's End," released February 23, Carrol McComas, for her first appearance in motion pictures.

Four seasons Miss McComas spent with Frohman and her recent work in the lead in the stage play, "Inside the Lines," was a personal triumph. She appeared with John Drew in "The Single Man," and also in "The Dollar Princess," "The Marriage Market," with Billie Burke in "Mind the Paint Girl," with Donald Brian in "The Siren," "Miss Dot," and in "The Salamander."

CARROL McCOMAS

Charles Frohman thought so much of her ability as a whistler that he had that specialty written into "The Marriage Market." With that specialty, in vaudeville, Miss McComas started on the stage at twelve years of age and travelled the country over, the capitals of Europe and South Africa, later adding songs. Miss McComas is the type of girl who never grows up and laughingly states that she has done everything from concert work, both ways, with the exception of the circus, and lives in hopes of doing that yet. Miss McComas is the daughter of Judge C. C. McComas of Los Angeles, the brilliant prosecutor of the McNamara bomb plotters, while her mother has made considerable of a name as a writer. Her uncle is Rear Admiral C. B. T. Moore, stationed at Hawaii, but just retired.

Miss McComas has also a varied stock experience, having been one of the principals in the all star stock company at San Francisco, with such members as Charles Cherry, Charles Richmond and Rose Coghlin. Richard Tucker will play the principal male role in the Kleine Edison feature, "At the Rainbow's End."

MARIE DORO SIGNS WITH LASKY

Los Angeles, Dec. 16.

Marie Doro, who came to the Coast for a short engagement at the Fine Art Films studio, has made a long time contract with the Lasky company, and will begin work in her first picture there the first of the year.

V-L-S-E RELEASING PLANS NEAR COMPLETION

Announcement was made this week that the new Hearst-Vitagraph news weekly will be released through the V-L-S-E service, beginning on January 3. Although the announcement has given rise to considerable speculation over whether the V-L-S-E feature service is drifting toward the complete program idea, no information on this point could be obtained from officials of the Big Four service.

It was said that complete details will be announced next week, by which time the service and distribution will be fully organized. The arrangements for release by the big feature organization were made by E. A. McManus, representing the Hearst interests in the new release.

A feature of the news weekly will be animated cartoons by Tom Powers, who is known all over the continent for his cartoons in the Hearst newspapers. He is one of the highest paid cartoonists in the profession, and will contribute animated drawings of many of the noted characters he has created, for the weekly.

UNIVERSAL MAY BUILD PERMANENT STUDIO IN THE ORIENT

Los Angeles, Dec. 15.

Former Director General Henry McRae, is leaving for Chicago shortly where he will complete arrangements for his tour to the Orient with a producing company. In all probability a permanent studio will be built by the Universal Company some place in the Orient where a producing organization will be kept constantly at work.

It will be Mr. McRae's duty to get this staff thoroughly organized before he continues his trip to other parts. Photoplays suitable for production in the Far East are being collected, and these will be worked out after the company once gets ashore.

The personnel of the producing staff which will consist of probably forty people, has not been definitely decided upon.

ELABORATE LIBRARY SET FOR "PARISIAN ROMANCE"

At the William Fox Pathé studios during the filming of two feature pictures were used a library set for "A Parisian Romance," that included furniture, rugs, tapestries, bronzes, statuary and a book-case containing hundreds of volumes, for which a chauteau in France was despoiled.

Players in silks and satins representing the aristocracy of France commingle with the denizens of a ten shillings a week boarding house.

"HOW MOLLY MADE GOOD" FOR FINE ARTS DEC. 26

The General Feature Film Company, of Chicago, announces that "How Molly Made Good," the six-reel production featuring Henrietta Crosman, will open at the Fine Arts theatre, Chicago, Sunday, December 26.

It was originally scheduled to start on Monday, December 20, but the company consented to postpone the date because of the popularity with which "On the German Firing Line" war pictures are being received at this theatre.

Board of Trade Kills a Hostile N. Y. Ordinance

City's Proposal to Ban Stages in Theatres and Increase Certain License Fees Successfully Defeated by Delegation from Industry's Federal Council

"GENTLEMEN, I congratulate you. This is the first time in my recollection that a delegation representing an industry as large as yours has voluntarily accepted an increase in the license fees pertaining to your business." The speaker was Alderman William D. Brush, chairman of the General Welfare Committee of the New York Board of Aldermen. The persons he was congratulating comprised a delegation representing the varied motion picture interests of the city, headed by the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America.

The delegation was opposing an ordinance increasing the license fees of motion picture theatres seating more than 600 to $150 per year. This was a raise of $50 and it was the willingness of the theatre men to accept this raise that brought out the chairman's laudatory comment.

What the speakers vigorously objected to in the ordinance was a section providing that "There shall be no stage or scenery in a motion picture theatre or open air motion picture theatre. For the purposes of this article the word stage shall be construed to mean any raised platform capable of bearing one or more persons, whether or not it has a proscenium opening or arch or is supplied with foot lights or whether or not there are any dressing rooms on the premises."

General Counsel William M. Seabury and Executive Secretary J. W. Binder, of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, pointed out that if this provision meant what it said, the Strand and Vitagraph as well as hundreds of the larger theatres now showing motion pictures as part or all of their programs would be obliged to tear out their stages.

Samuel H. Trigger, representing the exhibitors of the Bronx, William Brandt, speaking for the exhibitors of Brooklyn, and Lee A. Ochs, of the Exhibitors' League, also opposed the passage of this objectionable and unreasonable section, as did also Carl H. Pierce, of the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, and attorneys representing the Keith and Fox theatres.

After hearing the arguments, the committee went into executive session and voted to table the ordinance. This is a distinct victory for the newly organized Motion Picture Board of Trade, which represents motion picture interests aggregating approximately half a billion dollars, covering all branches of the industry.

LESSER SECURES RUSSIAN AND FRENCH WAR NEGATIVES

One of the first negatives of the Allies' side of the war to be brought into this country was received by Sol L. Lesser at San Francisco last week.

The picture shows with all the realism of war, the Russian frontier and the fighting in France.

The production is in eight thousand feet.

"Iron Claw" Will Come from Pathé After New Year's

Firm's Latest Serial, by Arthur Stringer and George B. Seitz, Featuring Pearl White and Sheldon Lewis, Will Be Released in 12 Episodes

PATHE will bring out, shortly after New Year's, the first episode of a new serial, "The Iron Claw," by Arthur Stringer, the well-known fiction writer, and George B. Seitz. Pearl White, Sheldon Lewis, and Creighton Hale, of "Exploits of Elaine" fame, will be featured in the principal roles.

"The Iron Claw" will be released in twelve episodes of two reels each. It will be produced for Pathé by the Feature Film Corporation, and directed by Carroll Fleming, former stage director of the New York Hippodrome, under the personal supervision of Edward José.

More than six hundred newspapers throughout the country have already been lined up on this serial, it is announced, among them the New York World, the Philadelphia North American, and the Chicago Herald.

Mr. Stringer's work was accepted on its merits from a large number of manuscripts submitted by some forty-seven different authors. It is a story of mystery and love with the hero's identity hidden until the last moment. Many of the scenes are laid on an island off the coast of South Carolina.

Pearl White, who is said to have starred in more serials than any other player now before the public, has been under contract to Pathé for three years. She has recently signed a contract for another year. Her work in the "Elaine" serial, particularly, brought her widespread popularity. Creighton Hale and Sheldon Lewis have also been seen in many prominent roles for Pathé.

LAKE TAKES CHARGE OF AURORA PUBLICITY

Stuart N. Lake, well known in New York as a newspaper man and publicity director, has been engaged as director of publicity for the Aurora Film Plays Corporation, which has just produced "The Waif" as its first offering in the motion picture field.

Mr. Lake was until recently with the publicity department of the World Film Corporation. Prior to that he was engaged in newspaper work in the Middle West and on the Pacific Coast, going from San Francisco to Manila and other cities of the Orient where he worked for some time.

Returning to New York he became a reported on the New York World, leaving that newspaper to join the staff of the Herald. He worked on the Herald for some years and later was associated with the staffs of the Morning Telegraph and the Evening Journal.

Ethel Barrymore With Metro Next Three Years

Screen Appearance of the Actress for That Period Will Be Exclusively With That Company, Which Agrees to Pay Her $40,000 for Each Picture and Stipulates at Least Four Features a Year—Film Engagements Are to Have Right of Way of Stage Contracts

UNDER the terms of a contract entered into this week between Ethel Barrymore, the celebrated stage star, and the Metro Pictures Corporation, Miss Barrymore is to receive the flat sum of $40,000 for each picture in which she is featured in a series of screen productions now being planned by the Metro Pictures Corporation.

The contract provides that these shall number not less than four annually, although this number may be increased at the option of the Metro officials.

In return Miss Barrymore agrees to appear in Metro pictures exclusively during a period of three years. She will also arrange such stage work as she may engage in during that time with reference to its non-interference with her screen labors.

Metro also holds an option on her services at the expiration of that time under the same terms as those provided in the contract for the previous productions.

Offered a Big Salary

While other stars have in rare instances received considerations in excess of that to be paid Miss Barrymore for a single picture, it is thought by the company that this is by far the highest contract ever entered into with any star by any motion picture corporation for a series of pictures.

The minimum amount involved, $160,000 a year, for three years, or $480,000 in all, is a sum that surpasses any published figures in the recent history of the screen.

Although the contract did not receive its final signatures until Tuesday, December 14, it had been under consideration for several weeks.

On that date Miss Barrymore, President Richard A. Rowland of Metro; Joseph W. Engel, treasurer of the corporation; Maxwell Karger, general manager of Rolfe Photoplays, Inc.; and their atorneys for both, met at the Rolfe-Metro studios, 3 West Sixty-first street, New York City.

After a few final formalities were arranged, Miss Barrymore and the Metro officials appended their names to the paper.

Miss Barrymore, who is starring in the stage production of "Our Mrs. McChesney," at the Lyceum theatre, had been discussing terms and details with the Metro officials, immediately after finishing "The Final Judgment," the elaborate Metro feature.

This picture attracted so much attention in film circles, that Miss Barrymore was at once the recipient of several highly attractive offers from other concerns.

Starred in Elaborate Features

The success of this picture, however, led President Rowland and the other Metro officials to determine that Miss Barrymore's name would look best in the stellar list of the Metro Pictures Corporation, even at a consideration, which seemed well nigh prohibitive.

The result was the contract which was signed early this week. According to plans outlined by Metro officials, Miss Barrymore will be starred under her new contract in a series of feature pictures, more elaborate and more impressive in cast and settings than any hitherto offered by Metro.

They will be screen dramas of the highest type, and will be especially written or selected for Miss Barrymore.

A clause in the contract just signed will permit Miss Barrymore to go to London next fall to star in a limited engagement in that city of "Our Mrs. McChesney."

This was made necessary by the fact that Miss Barrymore had already engaged herself to appear in the British metropolis next year, before arrangements were concluded which made her a permanent Metro star.

This, however, will not at all interfere with her screen work, as the limit of her engagement on the other side will be six weeks.

In discussing the figure at which Miss Barrymore had been engaged by Metro, President Rowland said that the officials had carefully entered into the problem of production costs in relation to it, and that the new Metro star's box office drawing power as evidenced in "The Final Judgment," the Metro picture in which she was recently featured, showed conclusively that it would be money well invested.

Represents Stage Ideals

"One reason why we wanted Miss Barrymore is that she represents the best and noblest ideals of the American stage, and we feel that we want Metro pictures to represent on the screen, exactly what Miss Barrymore typifies on the stage," said Mr. Rowland. This is what the American public wants for amusement, we feel assured, and it is this standard of photoplays which the Metro Picture Corporation hopes to maintan.

"The same may be said of all our stars. Not one of them, but is representative of the best that the stage or screen affords.

"On the commercial side we regard Miss Barrymore's name, as a tremendous asset. She is highly popular with the great American public, and her worth, from a box office point of view, was well shown in "The Final Judgment," the Metro picture in which she recently was starred.

"Also the fact that she is featured in a screen production is the best evidence to the public that it is wholesome and worth seeing, or her name would not be associated with it.

"This in itself has a value which can hardly be computed. It was these two facts, which led us to offer her a figure, which probably exceeds that ever offered to any star for a series of film productions."

Associated's Sliding Scale Plan for Exchanges

In State Rights Proposition Company Grades Towns According to Their Prosperity, Plotting Out Territory on a 100, 75, 50 and 25 Per Cent. Basis for Same Picture

IN last week's issue the Associated Film Sales Corporation advertised a novel state right plan for its "Big A" features.

Under the new plan, each and every territory's earnings are taken into consideration and classed, so that one in a poor territory does not pay as much as the other who is in a money-making territory. Each exchange, no matter where it may be situated, is guaranteed a square deal.

Each territory, according to Keen's new plan, is classed. There are three classes—A, B and C. The difference in price between territories puts every exchange on an equal basis pro rata to the investment.

Taking class A as one hundred per cent., Class B would be seventy-five per cent., and Class C, fifty per cent.; and, in other words, B is twenty-five per cent. less than A, and C is twenty-five per cent. less than B, or fifty per cent. less than A, which makes the proportioned profits of good and bad territory equal.

In addition to this plan, the Associated has added another—that is, of selling the features on an easy-paying installment basis. Instead of tying up the buyer's money, the Associated sells its features fifty per cent. down on receipt of film, the other fifty per cent. payable in twelve equal weekly installments.

This not only gives the exchangeman the opportunity of getting the price of the film out of rentals before the feature is actually paid for, but gives him sufficient time to clear a good profit.

Special to Motion Picture News

Boston, Dec. 20.

Governor David I. Walsh, of Massachusetts, may, upon the conclusion of his term of office shortly, become a motion picture star.

The Governor is considering an offer from the World Film Corporation for his appearance in the leading role of a production entitled "The Olive Branch." It is reported he would receive $15,000 as a weekly salary.

"This," says the Governor, "is an amazing offer, and I am considering it, together with several other offers made to me recently by motion picture men."

OHIO CENSOR'S LATEST VAGARY SHOWN IN A KALEM

Just to show that he bears no partiality between Shakespeare and "The Hazards of Helen," the Ohio motion picture censor sharpened his shears up last week and snipped a scene from the railroad series.

Kalem officials are still trying to figure the reason for the elimination, notice of which they received in the following letter from D. W. Phillips, manager of the Columbus branch of the General Film Company.

The letter read, "We regret to advise that the following elimination has been made on your release of Saturday, December 25, 'The Boy at the Throttle,' an episode in the 'Hazards of Helen,'—'Cut out scene showing child running railroad engine.'"

GLASS STUDIO OF AMERICAN FILM NEAR COMPLETION

The huge new glass studio being built by the American Film Company at Santa Barbara is fast nearing completion.

The third floor of the structure already has been laid, and to external appearances, the giant building is practically finished.

Every appliance in modern motion picture photography is being installed. It is hoped that the new studio will be in full operation by the first of the new year.

Fine Posters Hallmark of Good Films, Says Pathé

"It Is the Visible Expression of a Motion Picture Concern's Art," Declares Company, Which Has Helped Exhibitors with Unique Paper for Its Features

THE poster is the visible expression of a motion picture concern's art. The few really good film posters have a double value, for not only do they stand out from the crude ranks of the horde, thus fulfilling the mission for which they were made, but they predispose the public mind in favor of the film which they advertise.

Every one remembers the atrocities used by the film companies a year or two back. Motion picture poster art has progressed a long way since then, but there is still plenty of room for improvement. Among the companies whose posters are consistently good, Pathé is prominent.

Over a year ago, this house recognized the necessity for creating a special department with duties pertaining to posters, and nothing else Previously the "paper" had been left to a hard worked publicity department.

The result of the change was immediately apparent. Posters came out on time and there was a marked advance in their attractiveness. Naturally the best man to judge poster values was an artist, and an artist has always been in charge of the department.

Today E. O'Connor, who can paint a good poster sketch himself, is in charge of that end of the Pathé acivities.

Exhibitors everywhere have been loud in their praise of the one sheets advertising Pathé Gold Rooster Plays. These are portraits of the leading women players in the various productions, and are all painted by Alonzo Kimball, whose fame as a painter of women's heads extends beyond the boundaries of the United States.

The illustrations accompanying this article, photographed from posters of Pathé stars, among them Pearl White, Florence Reed, Fania Marinoff, Jeanne Eagels, Ruth Roland and Jackie Saunders of the Balboa forces, give a faint idea of the beauty of the original sketches.

Fox Stars Working Hard at All Points of Compass

Annette Kellermann, Robert Mantell and Genevieve Hamper Are in West Indies, Farnum and Dorothy Bernard in California, and Others at Other Points Not Mentioned

ANNETTE KELLERMANN, heading a company of twelve hundred, is in Kingston, Jamaica, British West Indies, working on what is known as the million dollar motion picture, as yet unnamed, being produced for William Fox under the direction of Herbert Brenon and a corps of assistants.

Theda Bara, with James Marcus, George Walsh, Nan Carter and Carl Harbaugh are enacting a strong dramatic feature story entitled "The Serpent," being produced for William Fox under the direction of R. A. Walsh.

Robert Mantell and Genevieve Hamper have joined the William Fox company at Kingston, Jamaica, where they expect to stay until Spring, working on feature pictures directed by J. Gordon Edwards.

Dainty Vivian Martin and a company of players including Niles Welch, Isabel O'Madigan and Laura Lyman, are at work at the William Fox Pathé studio, where they are enacting the film version of a popular stage play being produced under the direction of John G. Adolfi.

Ruth Blair and Samuel Ryan have returned from Chicago, where they have been active in the production of a film story of newspaper life, "The Fourth Estate."

H. Cooper Cliffe and Dorothy Green have completed their work in the William Fox film version of the late Richard Mansfield's stage success, "A Parisian Romance."

William Farnum, Dorothy Bernard and a company of players have already begun work on a feature picture being produced for William Fox at his studios at Edendale, California. Oscar C. Apfel is the director in charge.

Variety of Plots in Next V-L-S-E Quarter Releases

Walthall and Edna Mayo Will Lead the List in a Six-Part Version by Essanay of "The Misleading Lady," Ready January 3—Virginia Pearson Will Appear in "Thou Art the Man"—"No Greater Love" Features Regina Badet, Who Will Be Seen as Sadunah, the Dancer

IN the announcement just made of the new releases of the V-L-S-E for the first three months of 1916, Henry B. Walthall and dainty Edna Mayo who captivated screen audiences so completely in the popular V-L-S-E, feature "The Blindness of Virtue," will lead with a sixpart film version by Essanay of "The Misleading Lady," scheduled for release January 3.

On the same date will be released "Thou Art the Man." The production features Virginia Pearson, who made such an indelible impression in her first film production, "The Turn of the Road," and Joseph Kilgour, and is directed by S. Rankin Drew, Mrs. Drew's soon.

One of the numerous high lights with which Selig's next release, "No Greater Love," is said to be replete, is the "dance of the veils," presented by Regina Badet, who as the star of this production, enacts the role of Sadunah the Dancer."

Miss Badet will also arouse considerable furore among women who see the picture, by reason of the remarkable costumes she wears, all of them importations from Paris.

Anita Stewart in a Blue Ribbon

Anita Stewart and Earle Williams will return to the Blue Ribbon Features released through the V-L-S-E in the picturization of Dr. Cyrus Townsend Brady's story, "My Lady's Slipper," which is also scheduled for release on January 10.

Produced under the direction of Ralph W. Ince, she will have a strong supporting cast in Joseph Kilgour, Julia Swayne Gordon, Harry Northrup, William Shea, George O'Donnell, George Stevens and Charles Chapman.

The scenes of this play are laid during the time of Louis XVI. The action tells the story of an American naval lieutenant who rescues a beautiful girl from highwaymen.

Essanay, on the seventeenth of January, will release a picturization of Clyde Fitch's widely known play "Captain Jinks." It will feature Ann Murdock.

Vitagraph returns on January 17 with A. E. W. Mason's comedy, "Green Stockings," in which Margaret Anglin starred for three seasons. Dainty Lillian Walker heads a long cast, which includes Louise Beaudet, Arline Pretty and Stanley Dark, who was Miss Anglin's leading man during the three years of the comedy's run on the legitimate stage. Wilfred North has directed the production and staged a battle scene between one hundred and fifty negroes and two hundred and seventy-five extras made up as English soldiers, which is said to be unusually gripping.

"Island of Surprise" on Jan. 24

In "The Island of Surprise," another of Dr. Cyrus Townsend Brady's stories which is released by the same company on the twenty-fourth of January, one of the big scenes also calls for a fight, this time between a band of castaways on a desert island and a horde of blood-thirsty savages. Eleanor Woodruff, Zena Keefe, Anders Randolf, and William Courtenay are the principals of this production. It was staged under the direction of Paul Scardon.

"Submarines of Society" is the interesting title of Essanay's contribution to the V-L-S-E program on January 31. It features such well-known favorites as Marguerite Clayton, Lillian Drew, E. H. Calvert, and Ernest Maupain.

The balance of the releases of Essanay during February and March, as well as those of Selig, have not been definitely fixed.

Lubin will contribute during this time several productions which give promise of being noteworthy. These will include "Dollars and Cents," in which Tom Moore will make his initial appearance under the Lublin-V-L-S-E banner.

This story was written by Albert Payson Terhune. Joseph Kaufman directed it. Ethel Clayton will play opposite Mr. Moore.

Hitchcock in "Wonderful Wager"

Raymond Hitchcock will be seen prior to this presentation—probably in January—in "The Wonderful Wager," a five-reel feature which has been termed a "Ford Flivver" comedy. Nance O'Neil will follow these two Lubin releases early in the year, with a strong emotional play, "Souls in Bondage," which is being directed by Edgar Lewis, who made "The Great Divide."

"Kennedy Square," which Vitagraph presents on January 31, is an echo of the days when Baltimore was the social centre of the South, is one of the late F. Hopkinson Smith stories, with all the delight and charm of atmosphere for which he was so justly famous. S. Rankin Drew produced the picture which is in five parts. The principals include Charles Kent, Antonio Moreno and Muriel Ostriche.

Gordon MacLaren, a popular magazine writer, wrote "The Crown Prince's Double," which Vitagraph releases February 7, in which Maurice Costello is seen in the dual role of Barry Lawrence, an impetuous American, and Prince Oscar, the son of the king of a mythical principality, in the shadow of the Pyrenees. Norma Talmadge is his foil.

Olga Nethersole's starring vehicle, William J. Hurlburt's psychological drama of greed, "The Writing on the Wall," will be the following big picture to be shown by the Vitagraph company, to be released on February 14.

Joseph Kilgour and Virginia Pearson will again be seen in this production as well as Naomi Childers, Bobby Connelly, and other well-known Vitagraph players.

The principal interior scene of this production was taken in a house at the corner of Fiftieth street and Madison avenue, New York City, leased and elaborately furnished by the Vitagraph company for the exclusive purpose of filming special scenes that required a rich background.

Two Brady Plays

"The Light of a New Day," which is scheduled for February 21, is another Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, and will be followed by the much heralded play, "Colton, U. S. N.," on February 28. Dr. Cyrus Townsend Brady is the author.

Charles Richman and Eleanor Woodruff are the principals. Charles Richman has the thrilling experience in this picture of being shot from a submarine.

"The Hunted Woman," by the Vitagraph company, is the next of the contributions on March 6. Then comes "The Patriot," a dramatic satire by William Hurlburt, having Charles Richman, Joseph Kilgour, Arline Pretty, Bobby Connelly, and others of like popularity as its principals.

It is in six parts, and directed by Theodore Marston. Its release date is March 13. One week later, "The Two Edged Sword" will be shown, and following that, Robert Edeson on March 27 will be seen in the five-part melodrama of deep heart interest, "One Night."

The picture is being produced under the direction of Harry Davenport, in Huntington, L. I.

SHAPIRO JOINS V-L-S-E PUBLICITY STAFF

The advertising and publicity department of the V-L-S-E was further augmented this week, when Victor M. Shapiro was made assistant and E. L. Masters the head of that office.

Mr. Shapiro was for some time associated with Wid Gunning when Mr. Gunning conducted the Motion Picture Section of the New York Evening Mail, and recently has been attached to the Detroit suboffice of the V-L-S-E.

He has had a practical advertising experience, having been Mr. Masters' assistant in the promotion and service departments of the Hearst magazines, and having also been associated with Mr. Masters in the advertising agency field.

WILLIAMS HANDLING MOVCA CARTOONS

Los Angeles, Dec. 16.

C. L. Williams & Co. have taken charge of marketing the cartoon comedy subjects made by the Movca Company at San Francisco. Arrangements are being completed with Albert Blinkhorn, formerly of New York, and now of London, to handle the subjects there, in the British Isles and Europe.

The cartoon subjects are similar to others now on the market. Regular releases have been secured for the prints through exchanges in five Western states.

GENERAL ERECTING BUILDING IN SAN FRANCISCO

Film Row, as the block on Golden Gate avenue, between Jones and Leavenworth streets, San Francisco, is now aptly known, is to receive an important addition about next March, when the General Film Company will vacate the offices that have been occupied for several years on Eddy street to take possession of a fine one story and basement building that is to be erected at once on Golden Gate avenue for the exclusive use of this firm.

Plans for the building have already been drawn and construction work will be commenced at an early date, as it is desired to move at the earliest possible date, the lease on the present quarters expiring in February.

Careful attention is being paid to the arrangement of the new exchange, and it is expected that it will be without an exception the best arranged of any in the entire United States.

Storage vaults of unusually heavy construction will be installed and the regulations of the fire underwriters will be more than met.

The recently created Western division, which is under the supervision of H. H. Hicks, will have its headquarters there, Mr. Hicks now being in San Francisco to take up his new duties.

Ocean Film Entertains Exchangemen at Hotel Astor

Fifty, in Attendance at Convention Held by the Company, Sit Down to Banquet, Presided Over by Jesse J. Goldburg, Vice-President and General Manager

SCENE AT THE OCEAN FILM BANQUET GIVEN TO ITS EXCHANGEMEN

THE Ocean Film Corporation, with its board of directors and officers as hosts, and with General Manager and Vice-President Jess J. Goldburg departing from his usual role of "business creator" and masked under the guise of toast-maker, entertained visiting exchange men and representatives, in attendance at the Ocean Film Corporation Convention, during all of Saturday last, at dinner at the Hotel Astor in New York City.

More than fifty of the visiting exchange men sat themselves down for the satisfaction of the "inner man" after the day's arduous efforts and the consummation by the Ocean Film Corporation of the sale of practically the entire territory of the United States and Canada.

The speech making of the evening was confined to topics apart from the "business talk and compliment," and with the cessation of the attack on the menu, cigars and informal talk occupied the attention of the new distributors who have allied themselves with the Ocean program.

In attendance were President Dudley, Vice-President and General Manager Jesse J. Goldburg, Secretary George S. Brown, Francis R. Masters, Paul E. Rasor, William D. Judson and R. C. E. Brown of the board of directors; George DeCarlton, manager of productions; Joe Farnham, director of exploitation; Joseph Smiley, director; Marshall Farnum, director, and George Fawcett, star of all the Ocean Film Corporation.

A. B. Laddick, representing Sol Lesser of California and adjacent territory; Ben Friedman of the Western Kriterion Film Service of Minneapolis; Frank Frayne, representing the Greene's Feature Photoplays of New York and New England territory; Joseph Friedman, of the Celebrated Players Film Company of Chicago.

Harry Schwabbe of the Electric Theatre Supply Company of Philadelphia; W. C. Betts of the International Cinematograph Company, Ltd., of London; Robert Herring of Quality Film Exchange of Pittsburgh

Philip Adler of the Alliance Film Exchange of Cleveland; James Lee of the American Feature Film Company of Boston, and Thomas Tristam of M. H. Blackwell Features of New York City; and George Gilbert of the Ocean Film Corporation staff.

Marguerite Courtot Is Now a Star with Gaumont

Actress Who Will Go to Jacksonville, Florida, on Christmas Day to Begin Work in a De Luxe for Release Through Mutual in February, Signs Long Contract

MARGUERITE COURTOT has become a Gaumont star. She leaves New York Christmas Day for the winter quarters of this company at Jacksonville, Fla., carrying with her a long time contract as a star in feature productions.

Miss Courtot will star in one of the companies which Gaumont will keep at work making five-reel feature productions on the Mutual Program, to be released as Mutual Masterpictures, edition de luxe.

Miss Courtot's Gaumont engagement is only the second she has had in motion pictures. Miss Courtot, who is still in her teens, was born in Summit, N. Y. Her father was born in France, and her mother in a French Canton in Switzerland. To this day in the family all conversatioon is carried on in French. As a child Miss Courtot spent some time in Lauzanne, Switzerland. Only after most urgent solicitation did she consent to join the Kalem Company. Here she remained for three years, severing her connection this month to become a Gaumont star.

With Kalem Miss Courtot advanced rapidly from unimportant roles to a position as star. She has been featured continuously in the Kalem Company's big releases, and is perhaps best known as the heroine in that company's series, "The Adventures of Marguerite."

It is expected that the first release in which she will be featured will be shown on the screen in February.

FASHION WRITER JOINS STAFF OF UNIVERSAL HOUSE ORGAN

Marjorie Howard, until recently interviewer and special writer on the New York Times, has become associated with the staff of the Universal's Motion Picture Weekly as fashion editor.

Miss Howard lived in Paris a number of years, while her sister, Kathleen Howard studied for opera, and her brother Cecil Howard was studying to become a sculptor.

There she mastered the French language and took particular interest in the Paris fashions. When her sister made her debut in Germany, she accompanied her, and together they lived in Germany six years.

She has travelled quite extensively throughout Europe, especially in France, Germany, Holland, Norway and Sweden.

SCREEN CLUB MOVE UNDER WAY IN PHILADELPHIA

Philadelphia, Dec. 18.

On account of some recent happenings which did not please the "powers that be," several of the more prominent film people are talking of organizing a Screen Club in Philadelphia, with a home of its own.

Philadelphia is strong enough in film affiliations to make this plan a big success.

PAUL DICKEY IS A DIRECTOR FOR LASKY

Known as a dramatist, actor and stage director, Paul Dickey has left New York for the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company studios at Hollywood, Cal., to begin work as one of the Lasky directors.

He will undertake a production on his arrival, his first photoplay being a picturization of "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine."

Charlotte Walker will be the star and the feature will be released through Paramount Pictures. Corporation.

PAUL DICKEY

During the past few years Mr. Dickey has come rapidly to the front. In collaboration with Charles W. Goddard he wrote "The Misleading Lady," "The Ghost Breaker," which has been produced in photoplay form by the Lasky Company; "The Last Laugh" and "Miss Information," in which Elsie Janis appeared this winter on Broadway.

With his own company of players Mr. Dickey toured the vaudeville circuits of the country several times as the star in his successful one act farce entitled "The Come Back."

"The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" is a picturization of Eugene Walter's play based on the popular novel of the same name by John Fox, Jr.

The motion picture rights were obtained last week by Samuel Goldfish, executive head of the Lasky company, from Klaw and Erlanger, just prior to Mr. Goldfish's departure for a winter trip to the Lasky studios.

Miss Walker, who will be the star, has already appeared successfully in two Lasky productions. They are "Kindling" and "Out of Darkness."

CUB RELEASE FOR 24th A FARCE OF SURPRISE

The Cub Comedy release for December 24 on the Mutual program entitled "Hearts and Clubs" is a farce of surprises. Jerry, the central character in this one reel subject, is in one unexpected difficulty after another.

His first is with his perennial Nemesis—the policeman. Then he aids in foiling the plans of a father who wishes to marry his unwilling daughter to a rich young man.

Not content with this amount of labor he locates the girl's real sweetheart and helps him put father out of the way so that the marriage can be accomplished as the girl would have it.

As usual, the leading role (that of Jerry) is played by George Ovey, and in his support appear such comedians as George George, Jefferson Osborne, Gordon MacGregor, Louis FitzRoy, Arthur Munns, William Jackson, Belle Bennett and Janet Sully.

BURNS MAKES DEBUT AS SCREEN LAUGHMAKER WITH VOGUE

Sammy Burns, eccentric English comedian, will be presented for the first time as a screen laugh-maker in the initial Vogue Comedy release, December 27, on the Mutual Progrm. The title of the picture is "Sammy's Scandalous Scheme."

SAMMY BURNS IN A SCENE FROM "SAMMY'S SCANDALOUS SCHEME," VOGUE COMEDY RELEASED THROUGH MUTUAL

According to advance reports, Burns will offer in his comedy work slapstick novelties new to the screen. He has had long experience on the British stage as an acrobatic comedian.

PREMO TAKES OFFICES AT 11 EAST 14TH STREET, N. Y.

The Premo Feature Film Corporation, through its president, Harry Rapf, announce that it has taken the building at 11 East Fourteenth street, New York City, formerly the Kleine and Biograph studios, as their executive offices and studio, and will do all its work under the direction of Harley Knoles, at these premises in the future.

The new production of the company now in work, is called "The Devil's Toy," a story adapted from the poem "The Mills of the Gods," by Edward Madden, in which Adele Blood will be starred, in conjunction with Edwin Stevens and Montague Love.

Edwin Stevens is playing the role of the "Devil," a part which he made famous in a play of the same name throughout the country. This production will be put on the same big scale as the past production.

The Premo's recent release, Cyril Maude in "The Greater Will," is now playing on the Pathé Gold Rooster program.

LOIS MEREDITH, 18 YEAR OLD STAR, PICKED FOR "PRECIOUS PACKET"

"The Precious Packet," written by Fred Jackson, and scheduled for release on the Pathé Gold Rooster Program, will present Lois Meredith, an eighteen year old picture star, in the feature role.

Miss Meredith's legitimate stage experience embraced the leading role in "Peg o' My Heart," following Laurette Taylor, the feature part in "Help Wanted," and "Modesty" in "Everywoman."

FANIA MARINOFF IN "LIFE'S WHIRLPOOL" FOR WORLD

Fania Marinoff, who has scored personal successes in many Broadway productions, is the latest recruit to the World Film Corporation banner.

Miss Marinoff assumes the difficult role of Trina in the forthcoming production of "Life's Whirlpool," a film version of the play and novel "McTeague," by Frank Norris.

FANIA MARINOFF

Norris was hailed till his recent death as the greatest American realist.

Miss Marinoff made a painstaking study of the part of Trina before she would undertake it, as the character presents unusual angles and is distinctly out of the ordinary.

NORA MOORE MAKES RAPID RISE TO STARDOM

Nora Moore, whom Arnold Daly, the Pathé producer, discovered in a South

NORA MOORE

Carolina railroad restaurant, where she presided over the pie counter, is to be given prominent roles in coming Pathé pictures.

Miss Moore, who is only nineteen, has already been tried out in the role of Lady Dardinilis in "The King's Game," which Daly is producing for Pathé. According to Daly, she has more than made good."

Ditmars Shows Zoo Life in Paramount Newspictures

Authority on Natural History Has Trained Everything to Do Tricks for the Camera, from Monkeys Flirting in a Regular Drama to Flies Acting on Postage Stamps

IN his search for stories of interest to the "readers" of his "celluloid newspaper," the editor-in-chief of Paramount Newspictures has added Raymond L. Ditmars to his list of associate editors, among whom are John A. Sleicher, of the Leslie-Judge Company; Waldemar Kaempffort, of the Popular Science Monthly, and Roger W. Babson, the statistician. Ditmars is a well known authority on animals and the active head of the Zoo at Bronx Park, New York.

At his "School of Dramatic Art for Animals," Ditmars is engaged in taking unique pictures of the inhabitants of the Zoo, which will be presented to Paramount patrons. To obtain these films, he is teaching monkeys, birds, and even flies to act for the camera on stages ranging from the size of a postage stamp to forty feet square. Charles Snyder is his stage manager.

"We believe our films will be a great service to science," said Mr. Ditmars in an interview, "and that they will be an amusing and instructive boon to grown-ups and children. The star of the school is a sober-faced porcupine, who can portray every emotion of the animal world. In taking our pictures, it is necessary to exercise great patience."

The first successful play put on, "Trumpeter's Romance," stars trumpeter birds and a Canadian goose. In a monkey drama, the principals flirted, hold hands, and spooned in approved fashion. A hundred varied participants took part in "The Great Marathon," which shows the arrival of the smaller animals for a great jungle race.

"Two great difficulties had to be overcome in this scene," said Mr. Ditmars. "One was to get all the contestants off when the monkey started firing the gun and the other to distribute handicaps so skillfully that the swiftest would not race ahead of the less speedy. It required four months' steady work before the camera man was called in."

The next difficult performance required a stage the size of a postage stamp. Upon this performed the star of the fly juggling troupe.

Griffith in New York for "The Mother and the Law"

Triangle "Master Director" Makes Flying Trip from Pacific Coast to Consult with President Aitken, and Will Put Finishing Touches to Picture on Return to West Coast

D. W. GRIFFITH, the Triangle director, and most widely known as the producer of "The Birth of a Nation," arrived in New York Tuesday evening, December 14, accompanied by his secretary, A. E. Bidwell and J. J. McCarthy.

The object of Mr. Griffith's visit was, as he expressed it, "on business connected with my big new picture." Mr. Griffith came here direct from Indianapolis and he had been in Louisville but a few days previous for the obsequies of his lamented mother, Mrs. Jacob Wark Griffith.

While in the metropolis Mr. Griffith spent much time with H. E. Aitken, president of the Triangle Film Corporation, and in the executive offices of the Triangle at 71 West Twenty-third street.

He expressed himself as pleased with the way large numbers of new theatres are being signed up for the Triangle service.

Among other things he remarked that "Don Quixote," starring DeWolf Hopper, was one of the best productions recently made by any of his sub-directors, and he paid a high compliment to Edward Dillon, who had charge of it.

From the fact that "The Birth of a Nation" closes at the Liberty theatre, New York, on January 8, to be followed by a musical comedy entitled "Sybil," it is thought that Mr. Griffith's new personal production, "The Mother and the Law," will not be shown here until the Spring. It is understood that further work will be done upon it on Griffith's return to the West Coast about December 22.

The project of staging "The Holy Grail," by Mr. Griffith, is only tentative as yet, he declared.

Fifth Episode of Universal's "Graft" Under Way

DIRECTOR STANTON MAKING A SCENE IN "GRAFT," UNIVERSAL SERIAL

SOME idea of the trouble and expense that the Universal Film Manufacturing Company is going to in its production of "Graft," the latest of its serial features may be gained from a glance at the accompanying illustration taken during the rehearsal of one of the scenes in the production of the fifth installment as Walter Woods has arranged it for the screen from the story submitted by Joseph Brandt and Hugh Weir.

The story told in this installment deals with a strike among the textile workers. In the mob scenes more than three hundred men, women and children were employed to give the action the proper atmosphere.

FIRST GAUMONT DE LUXE COMPLETED FOR MUTUAL

Malcolm Williams has just completed the Gaumont's first Mutual Masterpicture, edition de luxe, which this company will release.

This was taken at Jacksonville, Florida, and will be first seen on the screen the week of January 17. It is called "The Idol of the Stage."

A FEW OF THE SCREEN STARS WHO SHINE IN EQUITABLE PHOTOPLAYS

JULIA DEAN CARLYLE BLACKWELL MARIE EMPRESS FRANK SHERIDAN LILY CAHILL

REED JOINS LASKY STAFF ON WEST COAST

Luther A. Reed, for the past eight years a member of the reportorial staff of the New York Herald, has gone to the Lasky studios at Hollywood, Cal., to become a member of the photodramatic department, which is under the general supervision of William C. DeMille.

Mr. Reed is a graduate of Columbia University, and during his experience as a newspaperman in New York City has come into contact with the leading men of affairs of the nation.

For the past few years he has been ship news editor of the Herald, one of the most important departments of the newspaper. Previously he was music and dramatic critic.

For the present at the Lasky studios he will be associated with Paul Dickey, who left for the studios at the same time. Mr. Dickey will join the staff of Lasky directors.

GREAT NORTHERN ISSUES CATALOGUE OF SCENICS AND EDUCATIONALS

An atractive catalogue, containing a list of diverse and instructive scenic and educational subjects, is being issued by the Great Northern Film Company, 110 West Fortieth street, New York City, and offered to the motion picture trade as well as to educational organizations.

Neither trouble nor expense has been spared in securing unique and interesting scenes and subjects from all parts of the world, and the minutest details are enhanced by the photography for which the Great Northern Film Company is noted. The catalogue will be cheerfully mailed, free of charge, to applicants.

BUTLER, CHARACTER MAN, CAST FOR RIALTO FEATURES

William J. Butler, six years with Biograph, and before that a well-known character actor upon the legitimate stage, will now be seen in Gaumont-Mutual Masterpictures. He has gone to the Gaumont winter quarters at Jacksonville, Fla., to act under the direction of Richard Garrick.

Butler's daughter, Kathleen Butler, is also a member of the Jacksonville film colony, where she is appearing in Rialto Star Feature productions.

New Year Line-up for Equitable Film Is Bright

Julia Dean Will Be Seen in "The Ransom," Gail Kane in "Her God," Ross in "The Senator," and Margarita Fischer in "The Dragon"

AS is customary with a newly formed company, the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, consummating and engaging right up to the limits of its requisites, many changes were necessitated and have been made during the past month, or since the recent announcement by President Spiegel of the forthcoming activities of his concern.

The tentative program as issued a short while ago, is now definitely re-arranged. The long list of stars, embracing a great number of tried and proven players and a few who are "debutting" in film work, will be seen, either at intervals or in one production.

The list of players of stellar roles, now either playing or already cast are: Gail Kane, Brandon Tynan, Marguerite Leslie, Carlyle Blackwell, Emmett Corrigan, Teddy Sampson, William Courtenay, Henry Kolker, Frank Sheridan, Thomas A. Wise, Lily Cahill, Muriel Ostriche, Molly McIntyre, Mary Boland, Clara, Whipple, Howard Hall, Gerda Holmes, Cyril Scott, Marie Empress, Lillian Lorraine, Lenore Ulrich, Arthur Ashley and Julia Dean.

Of these, a number have already appeared and are under contract for further productions.

Of the unannounced stars and plays, Frank Sheridan and Carlyle Blackwell in picturizations of "The Struggle" and "The Clarion," lead in importance, as they will be in work within the week, Directors John Ince and James Durkin being busily engaged now in assembling the casts and selecting locations.

Marguerite Leslie, late leading woman with Sir Henry Irving, and other stars, will star in "The Pain Flower," which will be directed by Harry Handworth.

Julia Dean, last seen on Broadway in "The Law of the Land," and "Bought and Paid For," is completing "The Ransom" at the Triumph studio, and Marie Empress, late star of several Famous Players and Metro releases, will be seen in a sensational production entitled, "Behind Closed Doors."

Miss Empress will be supported by Marion Swayne, William Huntington, Paul Irving, Thomas Tracy and Regan Hughston. "Behind Closed Doors" is also a Triumph production and comes on the Equitable program January 10.

Emmett Corrigan, under Frank Powell, will be seen in Le Gallienne's vivid and novel tale, "The Chain Invisible."

Gail Kane in her second Equitable picture, "Her God," is now at Eaco, Arizona, on the edge of the American desert, where E. Mason Hopper is gathering local color and atmosphere for the Equitable Girl series, of which Miss Kane is the star.

"Her God" will be the regular Equitable release during one of the early February weeks.

Margarita Fischer, who completed "The Dragon" last week, under the supervision of Harry Pollard, will be "debutted" on the program January 3.

Director S. E. V. Taylor is completing the final details of the first picture work of Molly McIntyre, which will be a picturization of Mr. Taylor's original work, "The Story of Nan Perrine," but which has been retitled "One Night," released January 17.

"The Senator," in which Charles J. Ross makes his initial bow on the Equitable program, was released December 17. The chief situations and principal scenes of this play were staged at Washington, D. C., with the cooperation of the Federal government.

In the month to follow, Mary Boland, Teddy Sampson, Gail Kane, Brandon Tynan, Julia Dean and Frank Sheridan will be seen in famous plays or novels.

REST OF KIPLING DESERT SCENES TO BE TAKEN IN SOUTH

Edward José, who is producing Kipling's "Light That Failed" for Pathé, expects shortly to take a large company south to finish the Sahara desert scenes required by the scenario.

Mr. José filmed some of them on an island off Bridgeport, Conn., but the rest must be taken in more tropical surroundings.

SUPREME OFFERS "THE COWPUNCHER" ON STATE RIGHTS BASIS

The Supreme Film Company, whose announced purpose is to offer complete evening programs of pictures at popular prices, is releasing on a State rights basis or direct, its first production, "The Cowpuncher," a six reel Western drama by Hal Reid, which was popular on the speaking stage a few years ago.

The War Bonnet Round Up, pulled off last August at Idaho Falls, Idaho, where ranchmen and cowboys met for their fourth annual conclave, furnished a large number of scenes for the production. Bucking bronchos, wild horse racing, herds of cattle and buffaloes, Indians, and soldiers have their part in the picture.

In addition, many Western celebrities, including Don Williams, Lee Cladwell, Roy Jones, Charles and Frank Irwin, Dell Blanchette, Hugh Chambers, Chief Red Wing, Little Bull, and scores of Indians appear in the supporting cast.

Eleven road shows of this picture are now touring the Middle West, and it recently opened on the Hamburger Circuit of Quality theatres, Chicago. The Supreme Film Company has offices in the Peoples Gas building, Chicago.

FREULER VISITS MILWAUKEE

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Milwaukee, Dec. 16.

J. R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, was in Milwaukee for a number of days last week.

He left Saturday for Texas, where he will remain until near the holidays, when he will return to this city to be with his family during the holidays. While here Mr. Freuler refused to comment on any phase of the business, contending himself with directing the attention of the exhibitor to the nation wide advertising campaign that his company intends waging in the near future.

One Reel "Sis Hopkins" Pictures Is Kalem Plan

These Short Films Will Take the Place of "Ventures of Marguerite," on the General Program—Company Will Launch Big Advertising Campaign

SPECULATION caused by the unique announcement in the advertising pages of last week's MOTION PICTURE NEWS that Sis Hopkins would be presented on the screen is satisfied by the news that Rose

ROSE MELVILLE AS "SIS HOPKINS"

Melville, creator of the inimitable Sis, one of the best known comedy characters of the American stage, has been lured to the screen by the Kalem Company.

Miss Melville has signed a long-term contract that practically insures her being a screen fixture throughout the coming year. Following the general Kalem policy she will be presented in comedy vehicles written especially for the screen, but built around the famous rural character.

The star will arrive in New York within a few days from her Lake George home and start almost immediately for Jacksonville, Fla., where the pictures will be made.

A departure of note in the presentation of prominent stars on the screen is found in the Kalem announcement that in addition to a multiple reel feature a series of one reel Sis Hopkins comedies will also be offered.

These short films will be released in regular service, replacing the "Ventures of Marguerite" in February as the Kalem Friday release through the General Film Company.

An extensive publicity campaign of unusual proportions will be built around the character of Sis Hopkins, a radical step in connection with regular program releases.

Kalem officials are now busily engaged in recruiting an all-star company to appear in the Sis Hopkins comedies.

Though well known as a dramatic actress and musical comedy favorite before the character of Sis Hopkins leaped into country-wide fame that unique character became so popular that Rose Melville has never since been allowed to be anything but Sis Hopkins.

Without the possibilities for universal popularity presented by the screen the Sis Hopkins character took the country by storm a decade ago, and the pigtailed hair and gingham-aproned girl from the farm reach the heights of becoming a fad.

Sis Hopkins dolls, Sis Hopkins aprons, and Sis Hopkins hair-ribbons were among the many crazes of the time. She is the only player known to have had a national publication named after her, when the quaintly humorous sayings of the character inspired the establishment of "Sis Hopkins Library of Fun," published by the Leslie-Judge Company.

The character of Sis Hopkins was the creation of Miss Melville and not the work of an author. Born in Terre Haute, Ind., and educated at St. Mary's of the Woods Convent and Franklin College, Indiana, Miss Melville made her first stage appearance in 1889, playing child roles with a repertoire company under the management of her brother-in-law. Her initial role was Arthur Sydney in "Queen's Evidence," and during the next three years she played such parts as Topsy in "Uncle Tom's Cabin," Louise in "The Two Orphans," Fanchon the Cricket, in the play of that name, etc. Later, with her sister, Ida, she formed a traveling stock company, and when a play called "Zeb" was produced Miss Melville introduced the character of Sis Hopkins.

The play, "Sis Hopkins," was then written, and following its opening in Buffalo in September, 1899, it has been played almost continuously ever since.

Week of Dec. 27 Brings 2 Vitagraph Laughgetters

"He Got Himself a Wife" Gives Western Studio Members Chance to Show What Kind of Rib-Tickling Methods They Employ for "Tired Business Men" Wanting to Smile

IN the Vitagraph program of releases announced for the week beginning January 27, the regular releases comprise two reels of comedy and a three-part drama. The Personally Picked program consists of a one-part comedy and a four-reel drama.

"He Got Himself a Wife," the first of these comedies, announced for release on Monday, December 27, is a delightful one-part laughgetter that brings forth the efforts of the players from the Western Vitagraph studio.

The story was written by Edwin Ray Coffin and produced by George Stanley, with a cast including Mary Anderson, Webster Campbell and Aileen Allen.

"The Making Over of Geoffrey Manning," the four-part drama for release with the Personally Picked program, was written in co-operation by Charles T. Dazey and William Addison Lathrop and produced under the direction of Harry Davenport with an all star cast, including such popular players as Harry T. Morey, L. Rogers Lytton, Ned Finley, Belle Bruce, Eulalie Jensen, Marion Henry, Tom Mills, Logan Paul and Jack Brawn. This was recently reviewed in MOTION PICTURE NEWS

"The Pest Vamooser," which completes Monday's releases is a one-part comedy written by C. Graham Baker and produced by C. Jay Williams. This side-splitting comedy brings before the public a cast of funmakers, notable among whom are Kate Price, Harry Fisher and Albert Roccardi.

For Friday, December 31, "By the Might of His Right," a one-part comedy featuring Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, is listed for release. The story was written by William B. Courtney, and produced by Mr. Drew. Assisting Mr. and Mrs. Drew in this comedy, Donald MacBride will be seen.

The three-part Broadway Star Feature announced for the close of the week and the start of the New Year is "Tried for His Own Murder," written by Agnes Johnston and produced by Van Dyke Brooke.

GIRL INVENTS SYSTEM FOR BETTER HANDLING OF POSTERS

Doris Brann, the young woman who has charge of the books and is expert stenographer for Manager A. L. Ehrgott of the Bangor, Me., office of the General Film Company, has evolved a new system of listing posters for the various releases handled through the Bangor office to the company's clients in Maine, which is working out most satisfactorily.

Miss Brann conceived the idea while Manager Ehrgott was in New York for a conference with the officials of the company, and when he returned it was all installed, and has been working out to advantage, saving a great deal of confusion in handling the posters.

Seelye at Work on Intensive Sales Plan for Films

Former Assistant General Manager of V-L-S-E, Known to Trade Last 2 Years as Advanced Exponent of Modern Merchandising, Plans New Method of Distribution

IT has developed that the withdrawal of C. R. Seelye, assistant general manager of V-L-S-E since the inception of that organization, was for the purpose of putting into effect plans long under consideration by him, which are said to be a big step forward in the marketing of moving pictures.

Mr. Seelye, who has been recognized for the past two years as one of the most advanced exponents in the film field of modern merchandising methods, is said to be working along lines, which are a radical departure from anything that has ever been done in the industry.

Mr. Seelye's film career began with the World Film, where he was director of sales and put into practical application many of the progressive commercial methods which had won widespread recognition for him in such nationally known institutions as Robert H. Ingersoll and Brothers, the New Era Manufacturing Company, and South Bend Watch Company.

He was one of the first to bring into the industry the intensive sales methods and service ideas now being applied by all the large film companies.

Mr. Seelye divides the work of distribution between four departments—the sales, the advertising, the publicity and the sales promotion departments—all of equal importance and all working together under one general plan.

This insures team work between the various departments, the duties of which are clearly defined. For instance, the sales department has general supervision of the branches, education of salesmen and booking.

The advertising and publicity departments get information from the entire organization as a whole by this method. Therefore the advertisements carry real sales arguments and the publicity, founded on fact, is furnished the newspapers when and where the feature is to be shown. The sales promotion department operates the sales systems and corresponds in a degree to the mail order department of a great commercial institution.

With the organization of the Big Four, Mr. Seelye transplanted his propaganda to that combination, expanding it to the point where investigators declared it to be unsurpassed in efficiency by the systems maintained by such prominent concerns as the National Cash Register Company, the American Multigraph Company, the Burroughs Adding Machine Company, and equally progressive institutions.

Mr. Seelye believes, however, that the distribution plan of the industry is wrong.

In his opinion the cost of distribution is too high and that consequently the exhibitor is charged too much and the manufacturer paid too little.

Mary Pickford in New Role—As Her Own Double

But the Play Won't Be Seen on the Screen, Because It Was an Incident in Real Life, with Adolph Zukor, of Famous Players, the Principal Actor

MUCH has been written concerning the art of Mary Pickford and her ability to play girls of youthful years, but even the most ferocious press agent would not dare to concoct a story paralleling an incident which occurred at the Famous Players' Film Company's studio the other day.

Ever since the destruction of its studio by fire, the company has maintained its producing plant and executive offices in different parts of the city. As a result, Adolph Zukor, president of the company, does not spend as much time in the studio as he would like to.

After an absence of three days from the producing plant, he recently arrived to observe a group standing in the middle of the big stage, the central figures of which were Daniel Frohman and Hugh Ford, and several children. Both men were talking to one of the little girls, a golden-haired beauty with face half concealed in mass of ringlets surmounted by a huge white bow, who was busily sucking a lolly-pop.

"That child is a regular Mary Pickford," exclaimed Mr. Zukor. "We ought to put her on a long time contract and develop her. She could double for Mary in any kid role."

Just then the child caught sight of the speaker and came running over to him.

"Hello, Mr. Zukor. How is 'Madame Butterfly' going?" she called to the astounded executive.

It was Mary Pickford.

The character in which Miss Pickford is presented as a child in the accompanying reproduction, appears in "The Foundling," a forthcoming Famous Players-Paramount picture. This unusual pose, with the contrasting representation of the Madonna, which she also interprets in the production, again illustrates the versatility of this film favorite.

"Salamander" First Moss One-a-Month Releases

Ready in December, the Picture Is Based on Johnson Novel, and Stars Ruth Findlay, Followed by "One Day," Sequel to Elinor Glyn's "Three Weeks"

B. S. MOSS has decided to make one release a month and has outlined the releases as follows:

For December, "The Salamander," picturized from Owen Johnson's greatest novel, and interpreted by an all-star cast headed by Ruth Findlay.

For the month of January, the release will be "One Day," the sequel to Elinor Glyn's "Three Weeks." The production is rapidly approaching the completed stage, under the direction of Hal Clarendon, of Famous Players and Thanhouser fame. The principal feminine role of Opal will be portrayed by Jeanne Iver.

The February release is "The Undertow," a picturization of Eugene Walter's drama. Mr. Walter is best remembered for having given to the legitimate stage such successes as "Paid in Full," "The Easiest Way," "Fine Feathers" and "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine."

Another of Mr. Walter's plays will be released in March. It is called "Boots and Saddles" and was produced on the legitimate stage by the Shuberts with marked success.

"Rosedale," which brought both fame and fortune to the late Lester Wallick a decade ago, has been selected as the April release.

In May, a piece entitled "The Call of the Cricket," the efforts of Edward Peple, author of "A Pair of Sixes" and "The Prince Chap," will be brought out. The releases for June, July, August, September, October, November and December will be announced shortly.

VAN LOAN AFTER USERS OF "MIRTH OF A NATION" TITLE

H. H. Van Loan, publicity manager of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, who wrote the scenario of "The Mirth of a Nation," intends to get after infringers of his copyright.

Already one motion picture firm is said to be using his title in a trade mark caption and a prominent producer of burlesque has just announced a burlesque under that title.

Mr. Van Loan has turned the matter over to his attorney.

SPARTAN FILM SOON READY TO MAKE 2 REELERS

The Spartan Film Corporation with studios at 1818 Fourteenth street, Northwest, Washington, D. C., and Glen Echo, Md., is completing arrangements to secure a popular motion picture star as leading lady, and will begin the production of two-reel photoplays shortly.

The company is also about to take another studio in Washington, and will open bids for the building of a large plant within five miles of the city. Offices in New York, Chicago, and Los Angeles will also be opened.

The officers of the corporation are: L. G. Grossman, president; John H. Williams, vice-president; R. Mason Rogerson, director; and Oswald D. Camp, treasurer. The business offices are at 218-219 McGill Building, Washington, D. C.

MAYO, BALBOA LEAD, IS OF THESPIAN STOCK

Frank Mayo, Balboa's newest leading man, is the third player of that name to come prominently before the theatre-going public. His grandfather, of "Davy Crockett" and "Puddin' Head Wilson" fame, was the first.

As a young man, Frank went abroad with Lewis Waller's production of "The Squawman," and played on the other side for half a dozen years. He was a member of Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree's company for a while.

When actors came in demand for the screen, Frank Mayo thought he'd give the new craft a try. That was in 1913, and he has been working before the camera ever since.

Mutual Announces First Ten De Luxe Pictures

"The Thoroughbred," a Five Reel Subject of High Finance, Made by the American Company, Will Be Released on January 17, and the Second Is "Wolves of Society"

THE Mutual Film Corporation announces the first ten releases of Mutual Masterpictures, De Luxe edition.

The first of these will be "The Thoroughbred," a five reel story of high finance, made by the American Film Company at its Western studios, produced by William Bartlett. In the cast will be seen William Russell, Roy Stewart, Jack Prescott, Charlotte Burton and Lizette Thorne. It will be released January 17.

Elaine Terriss and Adrian Jacobi will be starred in the second De Luxe picture, for January 20 release, entitled "Wolves of Society," a sociological photodrama. On December 22, David Horsley's production, "The Bait," a drama of the Sierras, written by Theodosia Harris, will appear as the Mutual's Masterpicture De Luxe. William Clifford, in the leading role, will be supported by Betty Hart, Ogden Crane, Edward Alexander, and others. The Bostock animals will also be featured.

"As a Woman Sows," for January 24, will introduce Gaumont's first five reel offering to Mutual patrons. Gertrude Robinson and Alexander Gaden, the stars, will be supported by Yvonne Chapelle, Mathilda Baring, Helen Marten, Charles W. Travis, and John Reinhard.

The American Film Company's second De Luxe contribution, "Lord Loveland Discovers America," released January 27, is a picturization of the story by C. N. and A. M. Williamson. It was directed by Arthur Maude, the English actor, who also plays the title role. Constance Crawley, a well-known theatrical star, has the feminine lead.

From the Thanhouser studios will come on January 27, "Betrayed," said to be an intensely dramatic photoplay. The last De Luxe offering for January, "Vengeance Is Mine," a five reel Horsley production featuring Crane Wilbur, deals with capital punishment. Wilbur is also the author of the story. Gypsy Abbott plays opposite him, and an unusually large cast is employed.

Malcolm Williams is starred in the eighth De Luxe, "The Idol of the Stage," for February 3 release, from the Gaumont Florida studios. Opposite Mr. Williams is Lucille Taft. On February 5, an American Masterpicture De Luxe, not yet titled, will be released in this schedule.

Frederick Warde, the Shakespearian actor, will be presented to screen patrons for the first time in the February 7 release, "Silas Marner," a picturization of George Eliot's novel, from Thanhouser. The picture is being directed by Mr. Warde's son, Ernest Warde. Among the supporting cast is Mlle. Valkyrien.

Chain of Theatres in Vancouver to Reduce Expenses

Houses Plan to Put Circuit Under General Manager, Whose Duty Will Be to Lower Advertising Rates in Dailies and Bring Down Film Rentals

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Vancouver, B. C., Dec. 16.

A NUMBER of the leading Vancouver motion picture men, who have been considering an amalgamation of their interests, are still working on the details of the proposed combination, but as yet no definite settlement has been reached.

The following houses are involved in the deal: The Rex in Vancouver, of which W. P. Dewees is manager; the Dominion theatres in Vancouver and Victoria; and the Majestic in the latter city, controlled by J. R. Muir and associates; and the Globe, Maple Leaf, Columbia, Princess and Bijou in Vancouver; the Columbia and Bijou in Victoria, the Nanaimo Opera House and the Bijou in Nanaimo; and the Empire in North Vancouver—all the latter houses controlled by the National Amusement Company, an organization of Vancouver business men.

An attempt was made to include the Orpheum in Vancouver, managed by James W. Pilling; the Colonial in Vancouver, managed by Hector Quagliotti; and the Variety, Empress and Romano in Victoria, managed by L. J. Quagliotti, a brother of the Vancouver manager.

These exhibitors, however, decided that it was not to their best interests to join the proposed amalgamation.

The plan, it is stated, is to pool the interests of all the houses concerned on some equitable basis, and place the entire circuit under the supervision of a general manager.

It is also planned to curtail the advertising space now being used in the newspapers, and it is also reported that an effort will be made to bring about a reduction of the present newspaper rates on theatrical advertising.

Some effort will also be made, it is said, to force down the rental prices of films furnished by local exchanges, and it is also possible that the new organization will establish its own exchange service to a certain extent.

J. R. Muir is already bringing in World Film features to this territory through his Dominion Film Exchange, and W. P. Dewees of the Rex is importing V-L-S-E subjects from Seattle.

These are now being sent over a circuit extending from Victoria to Winnipeg, and then returned to Seattle.

As will be seen, the principal object of the proposed amalgamation is apparently to reduce the general running expenses of the theatres involved. It is being pointed out, however, that the loss or curtailment of newspaper publicity will be distinctly felt.

It is known that if pressure is exerted along the lines indicated, some of the leading newspapers will immediately discontinue publishing their motion picture departments.

An organization among the local exchanges has been vaguely talked of, but nothing has yet been done in this direction.

SERVICE

Birmingham, Ala., Dec. 3.

Motion Picture News,
New York City.

Gentlemen:

I wish to thank you for placing us in touch with Mr. Leibold, of the Cary Amusement Company, Baltimore, Md., who wrote to your valued paper for our address. I thought you would be interested in knowing how this was accomplished.

An article appeared in Motion Picture News of November 13, stating that a negro picture was produced in Birmingham. This bit of news contained no names. Mr. Leibold wrote your office, the office corresponded with Mr. Benedic, your New Orleans correspondent, who in turn wrote to the Birmingham Chamber of Commerce, who in turn handed us the letters.

We cannot help but express our appreciation for a publication which takes care of the interests of its readers whether a subscriber or advertiser or not.

Thanking you for your interest, we are

Very truly yours,
Southern Motion Picture Company,
B. GRISWOLD, Manager.

MARSHALL FARNUM SIGNS WITH OCEAN

Marshall Farnum, former stage star, and more recently a motion picture producer with Selig, 101 Ranch and Fox, has joined the producing forces of the Ocean Film Corporation, according to an announcement made by Manager of Productions George De Carlton.

Farnum's first production for Ocean Film will be begun at once, and the name of the vehicle, star and cast will be announced later.

SUPREME FILM MOVES TO LARGER QUARTERS

The Supreme Film Company, of Chicago, which is at present located in the People's Gas building, will move January 1 to 207 South Wabash avenue, where it will occupy one-half the sixth floor.

The Press, Press Representative and the Picture—XII

The Public Wants Facts About the Industry, Not Extravagant Statements Which Merely Pay a Tribute to the Vivid Imagination of the Press Agent—Who Wants to Know That Felice Flimflam Feeds Her Poodle Dog on Camphor Balls, and Other Things Cut from the Same Cloth?

EVEN in such a hustling trade as the film business, it is difficult to make New England forget that its ancestors at Plymouth landed on a rock. There is a certain rock-like effect about the way some New England exhibitors cling to their prejudices. It is something resembling the affection which the historic ivy, which by the way is green most of the year, clings to the cold stones of a church crumbling under the weight of centuries.

For instance, it is no easy thing to push a new idea ahead in New England. That has been known for a long time, but the film exchange manager who comes to Boston from, say, a Western city, learns that fact to his surprise. Here in the northeastern corner of the Atlantic seaboard the new thing is regarded with some suspicion.

The New Englander, despite the paradox, comes from Missouri. Some of him you not only have to show, but you have to tease, cajole, coax, persuade, influence, lead, guide, and even sometimes blackjack before he begins to see as you do, or at least to admit that he so sees.

Unconscious Humor in Ads

All of which is prefatory to a casual glance over the Boston newspapers, particularly those pages reserved for amusement advertising. "Amusement" is right in more ways than one. The advertisements in themselves are in many cases amusing, and more so because they were not meant to be so.

Somehow the press agent gives you the impression that, when he sat down to write his ad, he had in his mind's eye an audience of brainless beings, not exactly human, who were lying awake nights and allowing their breakfasts to grow cold in order that they might read what he, the press agent, had to say to them.

In Boston, at least, the publicity man of the legitimate theatre has placed the film advertiser under a cloud. About all the Boston public pays, or ought to pay attention to in the amusement ads is the names of the attractions and the theatres. What is thrown in to fill is rank weeds which should have been left to rot on the sandy shore of the press agent's (sure, he has some) brain.

Here's a Boston Sunday paper. Read over the amusement ads. You won't be startled out of your chair. Yes, "The Battle Cry" looms up quite creditably, and the war films people do seem to have spirit. The look at the ads which come from the regular exhibitor. No thrill there. All as cold as a dry pen or an unoiled typewriter. Maybe the thrill is in the advance notices.

Wrong again. The stuff the exhiibtors of Boston allow their publicity men to put out for them sounds as though it had been swept up from the floor of the Ark. All those familiar bromide expressions like "a smashing picture," "the famous film actress," "the finest picture ever made,"—all of them are there. If you read them at all, and you're foolish if you do, you might as well check your common sense and turn loose your sense of humor.

Give the Public Real News

Why should not a publicity man for a film house be able to give the papers news? Is the film business so old that it has outgrown all of its novelty for the public? Does that public really relish reading the same old line of press dope day after day?

Who cares to be reminded seven times a week that a certain star is a "$100,000 star?" That Felice Flimflam feeds her poodle dog camphor balls? That Jigboom Jitney hates huckleberries but delights in a good swim in the moonlight? And isn't it about time, too, to drop this eternal revelation of the almost superhuman difficulties experienced in making such and such a film? Doesn't the public understand pretty well by this time how a dummy is thrown over a cliff and the hero crawls into the wreckage of his automobile below? Such a story came to hand not a half hour ago, and I submit it proves that the man who wrote it might just as well wear blinders and a blindfold. His foresight is practically ruined.

Here is the point—I trust you have lingered along hoping I'd get to it some time—the ordinary run of press dope concerning the pictures' angles for the scatter-brained mob whose dimes and quarters are always good, but who do not form the class of patron upon which motion pictures as an industry can stand permanently, is not satisfactory. And that's the crowd you don't have to go after, anyway.

They'll flock to the call of your billboard; they'll fall over themselves to get into your film ball; they'll worship your heroes and your heroines till the last breath. They are a constituency ready-made and always groomed for the film house.

New Blood Infused in Patronage

What the business will need most in the long run is new blood to support it, and new blood not of the old quality but of a better quality. In Boston the Lasky "Carmen" film brought new blood into the film house. There were staid Bostonians who had never seen a picture before.

Now they go once in awhile, and as the pictures improve they will go more often. Bernhardt, Sir Herbert Tree, Mrs. Fiske and players of such note are better advertisements among the class of patrons the picture needs most than a trough of the ordinary publicity slush reaching from here to Timbuctoo.

You say the stuff to reach that class is hard to find? Bosh! There's one paper in Boston that can find it, does find it, prints it independent of all motion picture interests, and in so doing performs a mighty service for the industry. The Christian Science Monitor on its international edition goes to practically every corner of the globe. Its local editions are read most carefully by a following which is unequalled in its buying power.

Maybe you have been too narrowminded to watch its columns, but that was because you didn't know that it was not a sect proganda sheet. It is a great general newspaper with its finger held close on the pulse of every worth while movement everywhere. Naturally that finger finally touched the film industry.

The Monitor began to publish stories about the industry, not gush stuff, but news. One article discussed the tendency toward higher admission prices, better films, improved methods of exhibition and points of that nature. The articles were sane, catering to no company, dealing all fairly.

The big point here for the exhibitor was this: once or twice these Monitor articles mentioned a local exhibitor or two, not, mind you, because he was seeking the publicity, but because he had done something which made him deserving of that publicity. That in itself furnishes a theme for a whole article.

This exhibitor was quick to see the advantage of such publicity. Remember that the Monitor runs no theatre advertisements whatever. It can say what it pleases, and it always pleases to say what is true. Hence it prints solely as news whatever an exhibitor makes worth printing as such.

Public Is Hungry for Information

Let the publicity man, then, make his news news. Something worth while is happening in the business every day. The public, the whole public, and not just the hero worshipping crowd, wants to know about that something. If the publicity man does not tell about it he ought to be fired.

If he doesn't know how to dig up the right sort of stuff, or how to prepare it, he is no publicity man. Both the exhibitor and the publicity man will greatly improve their pulling power just so soon as they realize that the public wants real motion picture news. In New England the public is not getting the right sort of news now.

It must not be forgotten that there are thousands of people who need only a hint to draw them into the picture house. There are thousands of others who can be led to the film house but will not go in regularly until the undoubted improvement of the picture is paralleled by a similar improvement of what is said in the public prints about it.

ROTHACKER MAY BUILD STUDIO NEAR FRISCO

San Francisco, Dec. 16.

Watterson R. Rothacker, president and general manager of the Industrial Motion Picture Company of Chicago, arrived here a few days ago on a business trip, and has been looking over the local field with the idea of establishing a branch studio.

Before returning home he will visit other sections of the Pacific Coast.

LOOKING AT PART OF THE TOLEDO BLADE'S PHOTOPLAY DEPARTMENT

Toledo Blade's Picture Department a Lesson to Backward Newspapers

THE Toledo Blade is one of an increasing number of newspapers which recognize the motion picture, and recognize it whole-heartedly.

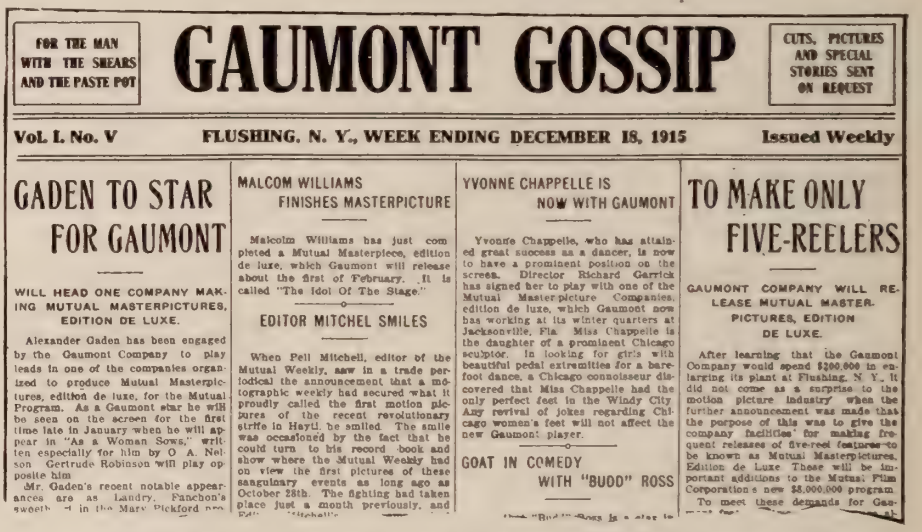
One of the reasons we know this, is because the Blade runs a daily picture department, with one, and sometimes two pages on Saturday. Another indication that the Blade has the right policy is found in the issue before us, that of December 11. It carries almost two pages of picture news —sixteen columns—as the Blade is an eight-column sheet.

Nearly ten of those columns are occupied by exhibitor advertisements.

The answer is plain. Toledo exhibitors not only believe the Blade is a good advertising medium, but they evidently have been accorded fair treatment. Probably the Blade has gone to the exhibitor, cultivated his acquaintance, and made him feel that his advertising would be accorded proper recognition.

It is evident, also, from the large number of advertisements that the motion picture department is being fairly and capably edited, which is just as important a thing as having a department at all. This does not mean devoting the whole department to local theatre notices. The Blade doesn't do that. It gives several columns to general news of the industry. But Toledo exhibitors are also taken care of, and in an intelligent way.

This reminds us of a stock complaint of a good many newspapers, which are looking for an excuse to avoid running a motion picture department. The complaint is that exhibitors want yards of space in return for advertising. Probably some exhibitors do. Can they be blamed? They have been told by the newspapers that the motion picture is only an off-shoot of the legitimate stage. The legitimate theatres in the town get generous reading notices when they advertise, and the exhibitor naturally thinks, inasmuch as he is a part of the theatrical world, that he is entitled also to free space.



The fault is primarily the newspaper's. The situation can be remedied by the establishment of a motion picture department—a real department, edited by a member of the staff, with a sympathetic attitude toward the picture industry.

And when the newspaper takes this forward step, it will find that the motion picture is not an adjunct of the stage, but an art and a business deserving its own space.

The reading notice ghost is laid when a department is established, because exhibitors are accorded fair treatment.

The proof of this argument is found in the growth of motion picture departments like the Blade's.

When Pell Mitchell, editor of the Mutual Weekly, saw in a trade periodical the announcement that a motographic weekly had secured what it proudly called the first motion pictures of the recent revolutionary strife in Hayti, he smiled. The smile was occasioned by the fact that he could turn to his record book and show where the Mutual Weekly had on view the first pictures of these sanguinary events as long ago as October 28th. The fighting had taken place just a month previously, and Pell Mitchell's

YVONNE CHAPPELLE IS NOW WITH GAUMONT

Yvonne Chappelle, who has attained great success as a dancer, is now to have a prominent position on the screen. Director Richard Garrick has signed her to play with one of the Mutual Masterpicture Companies, edition de luxe, which Gaumont now has working at its winter quarters at Jacksonville, Fla. Miss Chappelle is the daughter of a prominent Chicago sculptor. In looking for girls with beautiful pedal extremities for a bare-foot dance, a Chicago connoisseur discovered that Miss Chappelle had the only perfect feet in the Windy City. Any revival of jokes regarding Chicago women's feet will not affect the new Gaumont player.

TO MAKE ONLY FIVE-REELERS

GAUMONT COMPANY WILL RELEASE MUTUAL MASTERPICTURES, EDITION DE LUXE.

After learning that the Gaumont Company would spend $200,000 in enlarging its plant at Flushing, N. Y., it did not come as a surprise to the motion picture industry when the further announcement was made that the purpose of this was to give the company facilities for making frequent releases of five-reel features to be known as Mutual Masterpictures, Edition de Luxe. These will be important additions to the Mutual Film Corporation's new $5,000,000 program.

To meet these demands for Gau-

A GLIMPSE OF GAUMONT GOSSIP, SHOWING ITS GENERAL APPEARANCE

"GAUMONT GOSSIP," one of the eight distinct news services maintained by the Mutual Film Corporation, came into existence a few weeks ago. It is edited by Harry King Tootle, publicity manager of the Gaumont Company.

This sheet at present is small, and confines itself to stories without cuts. An illustration service will probably be started later in connection with it.

Like several other press sheets already reviewed in MOTION PICTURE NEWS, the Gaumont publication follows newspaper make-up. Headlines, designed to catch the photoplay editor's eye, are provided, and there is a commendable number of small items.

The style in which the stories are written is "snappy," and with a slant at the news column. The activities of the various Gaumont organizations are fully covered, for newspaper purposes at least, with the personal note uppermost.

The last feature is a good one to emphasize in a press sheet, because the photoplay editor is always on the alert for memorabilia about the people of the screen. It is one of the things his readers like most to find in their daily paper; and we fancy he is more grateful for a well-written, accurate, personal item about a player than he is for long-winded synopses or interviews.

These items, of course, must be news in order to pass muster in a newspaper office. There is no reason why they should not be news, either, or why they should not stick to facts.

LIVE WIRE EXHIBITORS

EDITOR'S NOTE.—It is the desire of "Motion Picture News" to include under this heading novel advertising ideas, successful schemes in the management, decoration and equipment of the theatre—everything, in fact, done by the exhibitor to stimulate his trade. We invite every exhibitor to write us about any new enterprise he has; also to come to us for advice or information along any line. HOW BUFFALO EXHIBITOR CONDUCTED A WINNING CAMPAIGN IN ADVERTISING LASKY'S "CARMEN"

THIS is a story of how one exhibitor conducted a thorough, intelligent advertising campaign for his week's showing of Farrar in the Lasky "Carmen." The business brought by this campaign was the greatest in the theatre's history. We call the attention of exhibitors everywhere to the methods used, and especially to the fact that newspaper publicity was, according to the exhibitor's own statement, responsible for his success.

The exhibitor in question is Manager Edel, of the Strand, Buffalo, and here is the story of the campaign:

Three or four weeks in advance of the attraction, Edel inserted small items in the Buffalo newspapers, announcing Farrar's entry into pictures, and her coming screen appearance in his city. Three days before the opening of the picture, Farrar appeared in a song recital in Buffalo. Near the newspaper ads of the song recital, Edel ran an ad for several weeks announcing "Carmen."

On the Sunday before the recital, all the music columns in Buffalo ran an article about it. At the bottom of this story, Edel placed a one inch double column ad telling of his interest in Miss Farrar.

The week before "Carmen" was presented at the Strand all the newspapers were given special ads which occupied whole columns.

On the night of Miss Farrar's appearance in recital, Edel sent a force of men to the hall where photographs of Miss Farrar, with an advertisement on the back announcing her film debut, were given out both before and after the concert. The next day the operatic star visited the Strand, where she was shown the beautiful lobby display (a photograph of which is shown on another part of the page) announcing her coming to the theatre. The morning after the recital, another ad was placed under all the criticisms in the papers where it was read by many thousands, and all those who attended the concert the night before.

The editors of the illustrated sections received a visit from Edel, and the photographs were displayed. Every newspaper on the Sunday before the opening ran almost a page of photos showing scenes from the screen "Carmen," which made a great impression. The Buffalo Sunday Times gave an entire page in its art section, the first ever given a motion picture, and one of the few whole pages ever given any production, legitimate or otherwise in that paper.

Letters were written to every vocal teacher, musical director, singing society conductors, school principals and others directly and indirectly interested, telling of the Farrar "Carmen."

The production opened on Sunday after a most remarkable display in the morning papers of the same day, and from noon until 11 P. M. the Strand theatre was the busiest spot in Buffalo. It was busiest spot in Buffalo until 11 o'clock Saturday night, after "Carmen" had been shown continuously from 10 A. M. until 11 P. M. during the entire week. All attendance records for the weeks were broken.

On Saturday night before the opening of "Carmen" the entire front of the balcony was rid of its regular seats and mezzanine boxes installed. The workmen labored all night and had the job ready for Sunday. These boxes brought 25 cents, and were filled at all times. This, of course, helped to raise the receipts.

The New York papers, on the Monday after the presentation of "Carmen" at the Strand in New York gave some fine criticisms and much space to Miss Farrar's film debut. These papers were taken around to the Buffalo editors and they, consented to accept a special story for Monday morning. Tuesday morning criticicsm was unusually liberal in space. Many of the editors visited the show. The Buffalo News used an entire column on Monday with a large head. This paper has a circulation of 107,000 daily. The coming out of this paper with such an article was an unusual proceeding.

The effect of this publicity campaign in the papers was noticed in many ways, one in particular being that some of Buffalo's "400" were seen in the boxes at the Strand, many of them seeing their first film play. The autos in front of the theatre, especially limousines, were noticed in great numbers. The Strand received many compliments during the week, which was the greatest in the history of the theatre, and Manager Edel says it was all brought about by newspaper publicity.

PRACTICAL HINTS TO EXHIBITORS ON LOBBY DISPLAYS

(Editor's Note.—This is the first of a series of articles by J. W. Martin, Milwaukee correspondent of "Motion Picture News," on picture theatre advertising. The articles will take up lobby displays, newspaper advertising and other methods of effective publicity.)

Roughly speaking, there are two types of well dressed lobbies—those of the high class houses which appeal to the better element in the town and the other type which "circuses" all of its attractions and depends almost entirely upon the sensational to secure patronage. The lobbies of the Strand and the vaudeville theatres in Milwaukee illustrate this point. The one utilizes only one sheets and photographs, the other everything from 16 sheet stands down. Both, however, are attractive and please the eye.

One of the first things an exhibitor should learn about dressing the lobby is that the number of frames does not count their attractive and artistic arrangement is the thing. It is better to have one easel set so that everyone can see it without difficulty than three that hide one another.

Not only should the lobby be dressed in such a way as to prove attractive to those going into the theatre, but to those leaving as well. Coming attraction frames should be faced inward as well as outward, so that those going out will have an opportunity of learning what is coming to the theatre. It is just as important to reach those leaving the theatre with the news of coming attractions as it is to tell the people on the street and incoming patrons what they are going to see.

These coming attraction frames and easels faced inwards can be used with particular effectiveness in the long narrow lobbies that are becoming so common.

Then, too, there are those beautiful photographs and colored portraits of the various stars which the majority of the big producers supply these days. These not only add tone to the general appearance of the lobby, but are excellent permanent ads.

In addition to the frames and easels there should be just a bit of color, be it a bit of evergreen, a few palms, if there is room, or some artificial green vines of which there are many varieties on the market. These festoons and decorations add warmth to the lobby and give it a "comfy" appearance that is foreign to bare walls or marble.

The hiring of a competent artist or sign writer to make signs, arrange photo layouts, etc., is also an excellent idea, for if he knows his business he adds much to the attractiveness of the front.

EFFECTIVE LOBBY DISPLAY FOR "MADAME BUTTERFLY"

For his two-day showing of Mary Pickford in "Madame Butterfly," Manager W. G. Sturdivant, of the Hoyburn theatre, Evanston, Ill., strung his lobby and foyer with large Japanese lanterns, each containing an electric lamp. Patrons commented favorably on the theatre's artistic appearance.

USES WORLD FILM "IF" CARDS TO BOOM HIS BUSINESS

Robert Miller, proprietor of the Orpheum, Centerville, Ia., reports having broken all records in November business. He used the "If" cards put out by the World Film Corporation as one method to advertise his pictures.

FOR BETTER PICTURE THEATRE ADVERTISING IN THE NEWSPAPERS

MOTION PICTURE NEWS believes that the newspaper column is an extraordinarily fertile advertising field for the exhibitor. It offers advantages which no other medium possesses. It reaches people whom the exhibitor could reach in no other way. The generous use of newspaper space by exhibitors everywhere is intimately bound up with the motion pictures' continued popularity.

All live exhibitors recognize this fact already. Many of them count their newspaper ad space by quarter pages, half pages, and even pages. But few of them have set themselves the task of making their newspaper ads not merely big in size, but big in ideas and artistic in design.

On this page you will find the first of a series of cuts illustrating exhibitor advertising in newspapers. From week to week, we shall run specimens of both the good and the bad, so that exhibitors may see what their ads should be as well as what they should not. We invite you to send us copies of your local paper containing your theatre ads.

STEPHENS GOES TO MUTUAL IN NEW ORLEANS; JUNET BEGINS PUBLICITY CAMPAIGN

THIS week witnessed many important changes in the New Orleans film row, and the biggest "shake up" exchange circles have seen in some time.

Early in the week the resignation of Maurice F. Barr as manager of the New Orleans office of the World Film Corporation was announced.

Simultaneously, S. T. Stephens, manager of the New Orleans office of the Fox Film Corporation, wired his resignation to New York. Sam Dembow, Jr., manager of the southern division for Fox, who was in New Orleans at the time, talked the situation over with Mr. Stephens, and prevailed upon him to stay with the company. Employees of the office, hearing that Mr. Stephens had resigned from the service of the company, called him aside in a private office, and presented him with a handsome tie pin as a testimonial of their esteem.

Mr. Stephens, who has been the Fox manager in New Orleans for more than a year, was visibly touched, but he said that his decision was made, and that he had received a lucrative offer from another company. One year ago Fox's business in New Orleans and surrounding territory was insignificant, but under his efficient management, it has assumed gratifying proportions, and is three or four times larger than when Mr. Stephens took hold.

Following a visit of Hunter Bennett, sales manager out of New York, the resignation of Ross Hardenbrook as manager of the Mutual Film Corporation was announced. Mutual had offered the position as New Orleans manager to Mr. Stephens, and announcement of Mr. Stephens' acceptance was made by Mr. Bennett, who further said that Mr. Stephens would assume full charge of the office and its thirty employees on December 20.

Upon the return of Joseph Klein, southern division manager of World Film, who was absent from the city when Maurice Barr's resignation was announced, it was announced that Ross Hardenbrook would assume Mr. Barr's position as New Orleans manager of World Film. Mr. Hardenbrook will be installed during the coming week, it was stated.

While these important changes were taking place, E. J. Farrell, southern district manager of the General Film Company, arrived in New Orleans from Atlanta, and coincident with his arrival it was announced that John T. Ezell, manager of the New Orleans office, had resigned. His place will be taken by H. G. Morrow, former manager of the General's Jacksonville, Fla., offices. Further, Mr. Farrell said:

"General Film will operate hereafter on a broader, more liberal policy in New Orleans. Our policy henceforth will be open booking—giving the exhibitors just what they want rather than making them take a scheduled program. This policy will be put into effect beginning December 20.

"We are going to have regular 'exhibitors days,' and will show our exhibitor guests our different reels for the week, and let them select for themselves. This is a policy that has been followed with great success in the New England states. We are determined that New Orleans is going to have the best that General Film has to offer—and presented to the trade in the best and most efficient manner possible."

It is stated on good authority hat the coming week will witness even further changes in film row.

It has been brought home with great force during this week that the film business all over the country is being reorganized to meet new conditions and new competitive hazards. Locally, the film men are on the qui vive, and almost any sort of a startling announcement would not surprise them in the least.

Paul L. Ford, president of the Peerless Feature Film Company, has returned from a four weeks' journey spent in New York. Mr. Ford combined business with a month's vacation.

Pathé has fired the opening gun in what promises to be one of the biggest local moving picture advertising campaigns. A solid page in the New Orleans Item of a recent issue is devoted to an announcement regarding "The Red Circle." Raoul Junet, the New Orleans manager for Pathé, declared he is more than pleased with advance bookings on the picture.

GLADIANOS CONDUCTS ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN WITH "FOX DAYS" IN QUEBEC

THERE seems to be no doubt as to the success that has greeted the Fox features in the Province of Quebec, and the opening release on November 25, William Farnum in "Samson," caused a great deal of talk all over the city. This was followed by the "Two Orphans." Anna Karenina proved a hit, inasmuch as the picture was taken in Montreal and showed nothing but Montreal scenes. Numerous telephone enquiries followed this picture all over the city, and numerous demands were made upon the Fox exchange for special showings of the picture. The Midway theatre, one of the larger houses in the city has inaugurated "Fox Days" each week, and a booming advertising campaign is conducted by Manager N. Gladianos, whose ideas draw him a great deal of business.

Quebec City has opened up a campaign along these lines at the leading house, the Auditorium, where J. H. Paquet is augmenting his orchestra for his three "Fox Days" of each week. This week he gave a special showing of "The Two Orphans" to the press of the city with the augmented orchestra which resulted in expressions of appreciation on all sides for the Fox program.

The present few days before the Christmas holidays has seen a slight slump in all motion picture theatre business, as the regular fans are spending much of their time shopping for Christmas. But there is every indication that with the Christmas season over and with the deaprture of Santa Claus, a remarkably good business will be done by pictures in Montreal. Plans are out for several new theatres, and one theatre which is to go up in the spring promises to be a very magnificent building.

The St. Denis is expected to open the first or second week in January, and this will be closely followed by the opening of the Regent, another handsome building, both of which will mean serious opposition to the downtown houses.

There is some talk of a ball in the near future, along the lines of the big Boston ball, but nothing definite has been settled in this connection yet. There seems to be no question that were such to be attempted it would be a success.

ROBERTS AND MISS KELL MARRIED IN WASHINGTON

Cupid again entered the film ranks in Washington, D. C., recently, the victims of his arrow being this time R. B. Roberts, of the K. & R Film Company, and Frances E. Kell.

The marriage took place quietly at the Raleigh Hotel. The newly married couple left at once for New York and other points in the north, where Mr. Roberts has interests. They carried with them from Washington the best wishes of the film trade.

WILSON AND ANDERSON ON COAST FOR FOX

Cary Wilson and Col. J. P. Anderson of the William Fox Film Corporation, arrived in San Francisco a short time ago, and after a brief visit there, including a survey of the local situation, sailed for Australia in a business mission.

CUNNINGHAM BUSY BOOKING "THE GIRL AND THE GAME"

The private showing of the first episode of the "Girl and the Game" at Moore's Strand, Washington, D. C., brought out a large contingent of exhibitors of Washington and nearby points as well as press representatives.

The thrills contained in this section were sufficient guarantee that the remainder will be equally as entertaining, so much so that there promises to be some lively competition as to which of the high priced down town theatres will have the first showing.

Ordinarily serials are not popular with houses in the business section, but "The Girl and the Game" will be different.

B. C. Cunningham, local exchange manager of the Mutual Film Corporation, announced that "The Girl and the Game" was booking itself. "I don't need a road man for that serial," he remarked.

"The biggest question I have to confront me is who shall have it first and second and third. Helen Holmes, the story and the production are sufficient guarantee for its worth."

"With the increasing demand for features, Mutual is meeting this demand and is giving to the small house features which come within its scope. For the small house wants what the big house has and its patrons are demanding it.

"We find the short comedies take best and supply the necessary relaxation after a serious long drama. The cartoons have become especially popular, particularly with the men patrons.

"They seem to be but a continuation of the cartoons in the newspapers which they daily seek for a hearty laugh. Mutual's outlook in this territory for 1916 is the biggest ever."

FAMOUS PLAYERS IN WASHINGTON D. C., MOVES TO LARGER QUARTERS

The Famous Players Exchange, handling the Paramount Program, is located in new and more commodious quarters at Thirteenth street,, Washington, D. C., having moved from the G Street offices on account of lack of sufficient space.

The present location gives the exchange almost double the floor space of the former building as well as many additional accommodations.

One of the most important of these is the freight elevator service in the rear of the offices, which provides easy handling of film boxes.

The offices of the various departments are attractive and convenient. The inspection of films are so located as to supply natural light except on cloudy days, and ample space is given to various forms of publicity material conveniently arranged.

Speaking to George Mann, local manager, he had this to say: "We selected these offices for the future and not merely for the present. I am tired of being overcrowded and so I have left space to grow, and we are growing very rapidly.

"I don't like moving, as it interrupts business too much, and so I trust we will remain here a long time. Everything is pleasant and commodious and the Paramount is forging ahead in all directions."

E. M. SAUNDERS, general manager of the New York Metro Film Service Inc., was the host at a "get together" luncheon at the Hotel Astor, in which members of the executive staff and the "ginger squad" that recently went into the field, participated.

There was a lot of the "ginger crew" reported the result of their effort in that direction. Through a brief campaign of local advertising in the interest of Metro feature productions, the "ginger squad" said they were able, in many cities throughout New York state, to increase the local exhibitors' business on Metro night, from thirty to fifty per cent.

Plans were laid to increase the efficiency of the new squad, and carry on a more extensive campaign.

Those present at the luncheon included Chief Saunders, C. W. Glimm, assistant manager; H. W. Kahn, branch manager, Albany; O. A. Taylor, branch manager, Buffalo; Joseph Lynch, New York outside representative; W. J. Neeley, traveling publicity representative; A. W. Carrick, traveling publicity representative; and P. H. Smith, New York outside representative.

MANAGERS OF PHILADELPHIA EXCHANGES SEE HOLIDAY PROSPERITY

"SWEET ALYSSUM," Selig Red Seal release on the V-L-S-E program at last escapes from the Pennsylvania censors.

At first the picture was turned down completely, but after two weeks of many rehearings and talks between the board and the company's lawyers it is to be allowed in Pennsylvania with but few eliminations.

J. S. Hebrew, Philadelphia, V-L-S-E manager, says "Sweet Alyssum" will be ready for booking now, its long sojourn in the censor's hands having upset the first release date set.

Mr. Hebrew reports that "A Man's Making," with Richard Buhler and Rosetta Brice, directed by Jack Pratt and "The Great Divide," with Ethel Clayton and House Peters under the direction of Edgar Lewis, both Lubin releases on V-L-S-E, are the best that have been done by the big Philadelphia firm for sometime.

The Vitagraph's "Battle Cry of Peace" finished its engagement at the Metropolitan Opera House on Saturday night. Several down town theatres are bidding for it, but the lucky one has not yet been decided on.

Mr. Hebrew has just returned from Baltimore and Washington, where arrangements were made to show the "Battle Cry" at the Auditorium in Baltimore.

In Washington, D. C., under the charge of F. B. Spurner, exchange manager, the film will be shown to both houses of Congress as preparedness propaganda.

Another picture that had a narrow escape from the censors' axe is Jesse Lasky's "The Cheat," with Fannie Ward.

Cut all to pieces at several reviews, J. L. Breitinger, head censor, consented to go over the case again, and after an all day session with Herbert Given, manager of the Famous Player's Exchange, only a few cuts were ordered to stand, and these such that the story is no whit impaired.

"The Cheat" is running a whole week at the Stanley, and in spite of the big snow storm raging on its first appearance was enthusiastically received by a fair sized audience.

No. 1339 Vine street, the home of Variety Films and the Greater New York Film Rental Company, has a hustling, new manager, in the person of Karl Kinzler, just over from New York, where he was manager of the sales department of the above firms.

Mr. Kinzler has several plans in view whereby greater efficiency and in consequence larger custom will come to the exchange.

He feels that "Shipwrecked in the Arctic," coming to Philadelphia in two weeks on the Variety program is bound to have a big vogue, because of its unusualness and merit.

The Special Educational Subjects also by this firm now running at the Strand in New York will soon be seen in Philadelphia at some of the big Market street houses.

Austin Interrante, former Philadelphia manager, has returned to New York and his old position.

THOMSON TAKES CHARGE OF "U" OFFICE IN MILWAUKEE

J. R. Thomson, formerly in charge of the publicity department of the Universal Film Company in Chicago, has been placed in charge of the Milwaukee office of the Universal, to succeed W. C. Brimmer, who resigned recently.

Mr. Thomson is well known in the Milwaukee territory, having been active in that section while connected with the old Anti-Trust Film Company. In addition to these two companies, Mr. Thomson has also been connected with the Standard Film Company of Chicago.

A big business producing campaign has been inaugurated by Mr. Thomson, and he expects to have some very favorable results to report shortly.

WORLD OUTGROWS FRISCO QUARTERS

The World Film Corporation has a noticeable habit of outgrowing its quarters at San Francisco with frequent regularity and plans are now being made for the addition of another office, adjoining the present one.

Although this concern has been in the Frisco field for only about a year and a half, it is one of the pioneers of Film Row, on Golden Gate avenue, and when the new addition is made will have three times the space originally taken.

A large fireproof vault is to be erected for the storage of film when the added space is taken over and many changes made in the arrangement of the exchange, which is regarded as being one of the finest in the city.

KALEM'S "MANGER TO CROSS" BOOKED DIRECT IN THE WEST

The Kalem Company announces that arrangements have been completed by which exhibitors west of Denver may book "From the Manger to the Cross," direct from the Progressive Motion Picture Corporation, 654 Pacific Building, San Francisco, Cal.

East of Denver the five-reel holiday feature is being booked direct to exhibitors by the Kalem Company.

THOMPSON, MANAGER OF "U" CLEVELAND OFFICE DIES AFTER SUDDEN ILLNESS

IT is with extreme regret that the Universal announces the loss by death of Clarence G. Thompson, who for the past eight years had acted as manager of the Victor Film Exchange in Cleveland, O., one of the largest exchanges owned by this organization, and who died at the Hotel Statler, on December 12, after the brief illness of two days.

His death came as a severe blow to the moving picture industry, especially in Ohio, where he was known and respected by every exhibitor in the state, and they predict it will be some time before the Universal will be able to find a man who can adequately fill the vacancy.

He died before many of his friends learned of his illness and his death was a shock to P. A. Powers, under whose able managership Thompson had been tutored in the film business, and who gave him his first position with the Powers company about ten years ago.

C. G. THOMPSON

It seems that Mr. Thompson was taken suddenly ill on the Friday previous. He caught a severe cold a few days before, and thinking it but a trivial illness, continued at his desk.

However, pneumonia set in and he died early Sunday morning after but two days' illness. The body was taken to Toronto, where the interment took place last Wednesday.

The sorrow caused by his death was shared by every exhibitor in Ohio, which was made all the more pronounced because he was just in the full bloom of manhood, and had not passed his twenty-ninth birthday.

Fate plays strange tricks with men. About a month before his death he took out a $10,000 endowment policy for his little son, which will provide for his future.

As an illustration of the high esteem in which Mr. Thompson was held by his friends, business associates and even his competitors, the following resolutions have been drawn up by the exchangemen and exhibitors in Ohio:

Whereas, the grim messenger of death, who respects neither age nor conditions, has removed from our midst Clarence G. Thompson in the prime of his manhood; and

Whereas, in his death we have lost a loyal worker and a faithful member; and

Whereas, the film industry has lost one of its great characters; a young man who started at the bottom of the ladder and climbed round by round until he stood a peer of any of his chosen work;

One ever loyal to those for whose success he labored, yet who at all times was ready to help and assist those in trouble; one whose tireless energy and undaunted courage overcame every obstacle, who arose in a few years from the desk room and seven reels of pictures to one of the largest film exchanges in Ohio;

One who was relentless toward his foes, yet ever ready to forgive and forget, loyal to his friends, proud yet haughty, ambitious but unselfish, willing to yield and sacrifice, willing to yield and sacrifice when in the wrong;

One who, gifted with a clear conception and a power of analysis, was able to push forward every enterprise to which he bent his energy; and

Whereas, in his death the film industry has lost one of those rare characters who was ever ready to fight for the right, regardless of consequences and without compromise;

Therefore, Be it resolved by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America of the District of Northeastern Ohio, through its officers, extend the sympathy of said league to the wife and mother across the border of our land of peace, to brothers and sisters, relatives and friends;

Be it resolved, that we tender our sympathy in the full knowledge of the loss they have sustained;

And be it further resolved, that we emulate his virtues and forget his faults, that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, to the Universal Film Manufacturing Company and to the proper publications, and that a copy of these resolutions be spread upon our minutes.

HARTICH MADE ASSISTANT TO PARTRIDGE IN V-L-S-E NEW YORK OFFICE

F. F. Hartich, who since last July has been in charge of the booking department of the New York branch of the V-L-S-E, has been promoted to assistant branch manager of that office.

This promotion is unusually interesting for the fact that until his affiliation with the Big Four, Mr. Hartich had had no experience in the film field.

He became interested in this industry through certain phases of it, which were brought to his attention as an attorney of the New York bar.

General Manager Walter W. Irwin, of the Big Four, being an attorney himself, and there being one other member of the organization who is also an attorney and who has made a splendid record for himself, A. I. Siegle, secretary to Mr. Irwin, Mr. Hartich's application for a place in the organization was accepted.

He has introduced many advanced business methods in the conduct of the booking department of the New York branch, and the efficiency of the service of that office under his supervision has won for him high approval from exhibitors everywhere.

As assistant to Joseph Partridge, Mr. Hartich will devote most of his time to the furtherance of the interest of exhibitors and matters pertaining to advertising aids.

HEPWORTH PICUTRES ARE NOW READY FOR THE AMERICAN MARKET

Special to Motion Picture News

London, Dec. 10.

THE question of the fitness of big British pictures for the American market is being revived this week with considerable force by the Hepworth Manufacturing Company, Ltd., London, agents for the Turner Films, Ltd.

The company contends that British pictures of the best type, taken from world famous novels and plays, produced with British stars in the casts, with British settings are certain to add a valuable element of variety to American programs. As British players have met with marked success with American audiences in the past, the company feels that versions of classics in English literature, featuring British players, will make a particular appeal on this side of the water.

The Hepworth company before the war brought out a number of films based on the classics, and also pictures produced from original scenarios which made a distinct hit. A few of the pictures were: "Hamlet," featuring Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson; five pictures scenarioized from Dickens' novels; "The Cloister and the Hearth," by Charles Reade; and 'The Heart of Midlothian," by Sir Walter Scott.

Among the original plays meeting considerable success were: "The Basilisk," "The Canker of Jealousy," and "Court Marshalled." The last picture is backed by a strong war flavor, though it involves no fighting.

Turner Films, Ltd., formed in 1912 by Florence Turner after leaving the Vitagraph company, and Larry Trimble, a Vitagraph director, has brought out many successes. One of the latest produced by the company is "My Old Dutch," featuring Albert Chevalier and sold to the Universal Company. The Turner company also produced the famous English play, "Caste," by T. W. Robertson, with Sir John Hare in the leading part.

Another success brought out by the Turner Films, Ltd., was the "Great Adventure," by Arnold Bennett, with Henry Ainley in the chief role, an actor who is under exclusive contract with the company.

A recent picture made in the studios of the Turner Films, Ltd., is based on Thomas Hardy's "Far from the Madding Crowd," a novel which some critics have characterized as the greatest novel in the English language. The London Times, which never wastes praise on anything mediocre lauded the production.

The Hepworth Company is at work on a screen version of "The Marriage of William Ashe," by Mrs. Humphry Ward; and "The Great Babylon Hotel," by Bennett.

Another item of interest in reference to the activities of the Hepworth Company consists of a number of picturizations its studios are making of Pinero plays. These are "Dandy Dick," "Trelawney of the Wells," and "Sweet Lavendar." "Iris," another play by Pinero, is now selling well in this country.

Added to this list of well known dramatic productions are: "Comin' Thro' the Rye," by Helen Mathers, "A Bunch of Violets" and "Sowing the Wind," by Sidney Grundy.

G. McL. Baynes, chief salesman for the Hepworth company, is in New York City, stopping at the Hotel Knickerbocker, and will remain in the metropolis until December 11. He desires to meet representatives of American companies who may desire to introduce to the American market the newest British made pictures.

Among the Hepworth stars are Alma Taylor and Henry Ainley.

DOUBLE PRICES FOR "HYPOCRITES" IN SYDNEY, AUSTRALIA

Special to Motion Picture News

Sydney, Dec. 1.

"Hypocrites," the four-reel Bosworth production, was the subject chose by the J. D. Williams Amusements Limited, to introduce a new phase in the presentation of feature films to the Australian public, viz., the combination of stage and screen.

Although the prices, one, two and three shillings (almost double the usual prices charged for a picture program in this city) the management announces that booking is well ahead, at the conclusion of the first week's run. Charles Villiers, who appeared to advantage in a five-reel Australian photoplay—"The Loyal Rebel," portrayed the part of Gabriel in the introductory part.

"The College Widow," the third of the V-L-S-E productions to be shown here, was enthusiastically received by the patrons of the Lyceum, where it was first presented, although in several instances the American "atmosphere" was not plain to the Sydney public.

Other features now drawing large audiences at the city houses include "The Deep Purple," World; "The Shulamite," London; "The Ghostbreaker," Paramount, and "Shanghaied," Essanay. The latter film, presenting Chaplin in rather a higher quality of comedy than in recent releases, is especially in favor.

The first installment of the "Exploits of Elaine," "The Clutching Hand," was exhibited at the Empress theatre, and promises to become as great, if not greater success than the "Million Dollar Mystery."

November 19 was Allies Day throughout Australia, and amid the gorgeous settings representing typical scenes from the allied nations, was to be seen a representation of the world-famous Charlie!

LOS ANGELES NOTABLES AT "PEGGY" SHOWING

Special to Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Dec. 18.

"Peggy," the Ince-Triangle production, which will serve to introduce Billie Burke as a screen star, was accorded an enthusiastic reception at a private showing given here in the Majestic theatre, December 16.

Mayor Sebastian, men and women prominent in official and social life, local newspaper critics, and West Coast correspondents of trade papers, expressed their delight at Miss Burke's acting. The song, "Peggy," written by Thomas H. Ince, especially for the picture, received three encores.

COLLIER'S WEEKLY PRAISES SELIG

A current number of Collier's Weekly devotes the opening feature story to a most interesting resume of the motion picture art in California.

The story was penned by Charles Van Loan and is profusely illustrated with scenes from the Selig Jungle-Zoo and other places of interest.

William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company, is given deserved recognition for discovering the possibilities of California as a motion picture producing center.

BROMHEAD, GAUMONT, ENLISTS IN ENGLISH ARMY

Answering his country's call, B. H. Bromhead, factory manager of the Gaumont company at Flushing, N. Y., has gone to Canada to enlist.

Mr. Bromhead is an Englishman who has been connected for some years with the film industry in Europe, Australia and America. As a number of months are required for training, he will not reach the front until next summer.

LESSER MAKES FIFTH TRIP TO NEW YORK IN A YEAR

Sol L. Lesser, president of the All Star Features Distributors, Inc., operating on the Coast and through the Middle West, left San Francisco, December 12, for New York City, to close contracts for several large feature productions.

This is Mr. Lesser's fifth trip this year. He estimates that ten per cent. of his profits are paid out annually for railroad fares.

Looking Ahead With The Producers

"GIRL AND GAME" PRE-BOOKINGS PRESAGE BIG BUSINESS FOR SIGNAL

THE first chapters of "The Girl and the Game," produced by the Signal Film Corporation, which will be released December 27, have been shown informally in Chicago. They received such an ovation from exhibitors that the prints which had been sent personally to Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the Signal Film Corporation, were kept busy all day, that the constantly arriving exhibitors might be able to view them.

The result is that "The Girl and the Game," even a fortnight before actual release date has a volume of bookings rivaling the records established by "The Million Dollar Mystery" and "The Diamond from the Sky."

The story is of empire building—the reclamation of the great houseless tracts of the West by the railroad. It is a tale of battling interests, not merely two men fighting for a fortune with the ever present sympathy inspiring heroine's welfare as the prize, but a struggle of man-made forces in which millions of dollars are involved, the future of a country at stake and the prosperity of thousands in peril.

Helen Holmes as the heroine-star, Frank Hamilton Spearman, the author, and James P. McGowan the director, offer a satisfactory combination of talent. Mr. Spearman, it is said, has received for writing this screen novel the highest price ever paid an author for the adaptation of his talents to the screen.

"This great railroad film novel is built differently from any previously offered," says Mr. Hutchinson. "There is no element missing necessary for the picture's success artistically or financially.

"I guarantee these thrills and want the exhibitors to watch for them. There are so many that I will only point out those in the first four chapters. Here they are:

"In chapter No. 1—Runaway train; Helen's leap on horseback into river when her rescue mission seems foiled by open draw. Terrific collision when Helen by throwing switch sends runaway freight into siding.

"In chapter No. 2—Train pursuit of the bandits; Helen's mad leap from engine to engine; sensational capture of Spike, the crook.

"In chapter No. 3—The burning train; Helen's recue of Storm by stretching rope across tracks from telegraph pole to tree top as burning train speeds beneath; storm is rescued by grasping rope; explosion of five cars of dynamite.

"In chapter No. 4—The struggle on the edge of the cliff; Helen's plunge into ocean and cliff; race between express train and speed launch."

"In my viewings of pictures I have never witnessed anything as thrilling as Helen's leap from engine to engine."

"The Girl and the Game" is released December 27 as a Mutual Special Feature.

KNICKERBOCKER STAR FEATURES AGAIN ON GENERAL

Khickerbocker Star Features will again be released on the General Film Program. This action is the result of numberless requests for this brand of three-reelers from exhibitors and patrons of the screen.

The policy of Knickerbocker Star Features has been to give first class feature productions in every respect in regular service. This policy will be continued, now that the brand has been revived.

Instead of releasing every other week, as heretofore, the new schedule of Knickerbocker will be one a week, commencing December 24 with Vinnie Burns in "Every Girl."

Following this release on December 31 will be "The Mysterious Bride."

"PAULA" IS FIRST PALLAS VEHICLE FOR LENORE ULRICH

Following a short rest in her home in Milwaukee, Wis., Lenore Ulrich, the popular little star of the stage and screen has commenced work on her first motion picture subject for Pallas Pictures, entitled "Paula," a dramatic romance of modern times presenting a tale of Mexican intrigue and American progressiveness.

This engagement was possible through Oliver Morosco, who has just secured her signature to a two years' contract.

In order to get the correct atmosphere for this play the star was somewhat doubtfully approached on the subject of her willingness to journey to Mexico in face of existing conditions there, but Miss Ulrich promptly consented to the trip.

Playing opposit. the star is Forrest Stanley.

Other important characters are entrusted to Herbert Standing, Howard Davies, Jack Livingston and Velma Lefler. "Paula" will be scheduled for release on the Paramount program soon after January 1.

EDNA MAY'S OPINION OF FILM DRAMA RAISED BY ITS ART

Edna May, engaged by the Vitagraph Company as the star for a forthcoming feature, under production, is now a firm believer in the worth of the photoplay.

Formerly, Miss May regarded motion pictures as "a catch penny device," but a few weeks at the Vitagraph studio have changed her opinion.

"I realize now," says the former comic opera star," how great a work of education the photoplay performs. It is impossible to calculate the influence of the picture play."

Miss May, who is the wife of a New York millionaire, and remembered in the theatrical world as the star of "The Belle of New York," is working under the personal direction of Albert E. Smith.

VIM ANNOUNCES 5 COMEDY RELEASES

The Vim comedy players are 'way ahead of schedule, and have the following releases ready: December 31, "Ups and Downs"; January 7, "This Way Out"; January 14, "Chickens"; January 21, "Frenzied Finance"; and January 28, "Busted Hearts."

In all these releases, Bobbie Burns and Walt Stull appear in their original roles of Pokes and Jabbs, supported by Babe Hardy as Fatty, Spook Hanson as Runt and pretty Ethel Burton.

COMING TRIANGLE PLAYS WILL NUMBER FORTY FOR THE NEW YEAR

THE Triangle Film Corporation announces among the new feature plays of the early part of the new year, the following:

Orrin Johnson in "D'Artagnan"; William S. Hart in "Hell's Hinges"; Willard Mack in "The Conqueror"; Bessie Barriscale and Bruce McRae in "The Green Swamp"; Mae Marsh in "Hoodoo Ann"; Wilfred Lucas and Mary Alden in "Acquitted"; Norma Talmadge and Seena Owen in "Martha's Vindication"; Sam Bernard in "The Great Pearl Tangle"; Chester Conklin in "Dizzy Heights and Daring Hearts."

These are only a few of a long list of thirty or forty plays that might be named.

It is believed that "D'Artagnan," an Ince-Kay-Bee production will prove a genuine surprise in its fresh and unhackneyed treatment of "The Three Musketeers" theme.

Those who have seen the film say that Dorothy Dalton as beautiful Anne of Austria, and Walt Whitman as Cardinal Richelieu share honors with the star.

"The Green Swamp" will show Bessie Barriscale in the somewhat novel role of an extremely jealous wife, one who hounds her doctor husband and prevents him from attaining his complete success in his profession. It comes from the Inceville studios.

For the filming of "Hell's Hinges" starring William S. Hart, a complete village was built near Inceville and burned down to make the fiery climax of the piece. It takes its title from the name of a frontier town in the far West.

"Acquitted" presents Wilfred Lucas and Mary Alden in the featured roles, a deserved promotion when their much good work at the Griffith studio is considered.

Miss Alden was the mulatto housekeeper in "The Birth of a Nation." The story is of unusual interest. It was adapted from one of Mary Roberts Rhinehart's mystery novels.

There is a large cast, including Sam DeGrasse, Elmer Clifton, Spottiswoode Aitken, and D. W. Griffith's new ingenue find Bessie Love. "Martha's Vindication" is a small town domestic drama in which both Miss Talmadge and Miss Owen have congenial parts.

As to the remaining two, "The Great Pearl Tangle," gives Sam Bernard his first big opportunity at Keystone, while "Dizzy Heights" is replete with aeroplane thrills and winds up with the dynamiting of a smokestack 200 feet high.

PASADENA ROSE TOURNAMENT WILL BE FILMED FOR A UNIVERSAL

TO Joseph De Grasse, one of the directors of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has fallen the task of filming scenes for a subject at Tournament Park, Pasadena, on January 1.

The scenario for this play, which will have one of the most beautiful settings that could be found anywhere in the country—Pasadena's world-famed Tournament of Roses with its magnificent flower-bedecked vehicles and scenes of beauty outside and inside of the park—is now being prepared under the supervision of Director De Grasse who, of course, intends to make the story revolve around Pasadena's Tournament of Roses.

Mr. DeGrasse, who has been directing motion pictures for the past five years, is an old actor himself, and for nine years was one of the best known Shakespearian stars in this country, his wife, known on the stage as Ida May Park, playing opposite him.

Mr. DeGrasse appeared in the Middle West and Pacific Coast and in theatrical circles, he obtained the reputation of being able to make Shakespeare pay on the road.

Two of Mr. DeGrasse's roles which won for him the highest commendation of the critics were Hamlet and Shylock. His presentation of Shakespeare's "Merchant of Venice" was always compared favorably with the enactment of the famous role by Henry Irving, England's most noted tragedian, who was living at the time.

Mr. DeGrasse was lured into filmdom about five years ago, appearing first as an actor with Pathé Freres, and subsequently directing for that company. Two years ago he joined the Universal forces.

WHEN THE LIGHT REALLY FAILED

According to Robert Edeson, who is now working in a film version of Kipling's "The Light That Failed," for Pathé, the picture is well named. Two weeks ago the work was held up for three days on account of poor light.

EAGLE TAKES SCENES IN STEEL PLANT FOR WORLD FEATURE, WITH ROBERT WARWICK

ROBERT WARWICK IN "THE AMBITION OF MARK TRUITT" AND ALICE BRADY IN "THE RACK," WORLD FILM PHOTOPLAYS

THE efforts of Managing Director M. E. Hoffman of the World Film Corporation, at the Fort Lee, N. J., studios, were turned during the past week toward preparations for the return of Robert Warwick, Director Oscar Eagle, and the company producing "The Ambition of Mark Truitt."

For the past six weeks Director Eagle and his company have been engaged in taking exteriors and big mill scenes.

Only the interiors to be made in the studio remain undone, but these are of such massive construction as to require fully half of the floor space of the Fort Lee plant.

The "Ambition of Mark Truitt" company went first to Pittsburgh, where the scenes in which the hero fights his way against all obstacles from his humble employment in the steel mills to a position of dominance and power are enacted.

The company was permitted to use one of the big plants of the United States Steel Corporation, where work on munitions for the Allies was being carried on night and day.

Without interrupting the regular routine of the mill, Director Eagle was able to take many hundred feet of mill scenes in which Warwick participated along with thousands of regular mill employees.

The company has been for the past month at Savannah, Ga. The picture includes scenes along the coast and the Savannah River, as well as locations embodying many of the quaint, old fashioned Southern mansions for which Savannah is famous.

While in Savannah the company headed by Warwick were given a taste of true Southern hospitality.

The mayor of the city and many of its leading families showed a keen interest in the progress of the picture by visiting the "locations" on which the company was working and extending cordial invitations to the star and leading players.

Director Barry O'Neill and the Holbrook Blinn company, producing the World Film feature, "Life's Whirlpool," based on Frank Norris's American novel "McTeague," left the Fort Lee studios a few days ago for the South.

Many of the exterior scenes have already been taken in San Francisco and Death Valley, and the interiors were practically completed at the studio before Director O'Neill decided to elaborate certain sections of the story.

The company will visit Birmingham, Ala., for a few days to take some scenes in the mining region, after which they will go to Jacksonville, Fla., to complete the exteriors.

Nothing remains to be done in the new feature play in which George Beban is starring, beyond a few more simple exterior scenes now under completion at the Peerless Fort Lee studios.

The title of the picture, however, is still undecided. Beginning with the title "The Genius," the World Film directors and business managers have gone over a score of suggested names without finding one that fully met the requirements.

Director Tourneur believes the new Beban picture the finest production of his career. A decision will be reached this week, as this feature is scheduled for release early in January.

"GREEN STOCKINGS," VITAGRAPH 6 PART BLUE RIBBON, COMPLETED

The Vitagraph Company has just completed its filming of "Green Stockings," a comedy of English life, whose plot is based on a superstition that the unmarriageable daughter shall wear stockings of that color at her sister's wedding.

Inasmuch as the stigma of being an "old maid" is not desirable in cost cases, girls in English families have no intense craving to wear the emerald hosiery.

Lillian Walker, the Vitagraph "Dimples," heads the cast as the apparently unmarriageable daughter.

Wilfrid North directed the film. It released as a six-part Blue Ribbon feature.

CONSTANCE CRAWLEY CAST FOR A CLIPPER

Arthur Maude and Constance Crawley have leading roles in "The Wraith of Hadden Towers," a three reel American Clipper production to be released shortly.

"WHAT WILL PEOPLE SAY?" METRO, COMPLETED

Mme. Petrova, who will soon leave the speaking stage for good, to devote herself exclusively to the making of Metro plays, has finished the final scenes in "What Will People Say?" a five part feature produced at the Popular Plays and Players studio, in Fort Lee, N. J., and which will be released on the Metro program on January 3.

In "What Will People Say?" a picturization of Rupert Hughes' novel of the same name, Mme. Petrova has the part of a young woman who faces the problem of marrying the man of her heart, and remaining poor, or accepting the proposal of a wealthy broker, who can provide her with the luxuries to which she was accustomed before her father was ruined financially. She does marry the broker, and the marriage proves a failure.

Soon afterward she finds her husband with his former mistress, and while she is debating on a plan of action, she meets her former sweetheart. She confesses her love for him and while they are together her husband finds her in a supposedly compromising situation.

In a jealous frenzy he stabs her. Upon her recovery, she obtains a divorce and marries the man of her choice. Mme. Petrova is surrounded by a strong supporting cast, including Fritz de Lint, a new leading man.

NAN CARTER WITH THEDA BARA IN "THE SERPENT"

Nan Carter, who has just joined the William Fox forces to appear in feature productions, has commenced work with Theda Bara in a five-part drama, entitled "The Serpent," under the direction of R. A. Walsh.

Mr. Walsh is in private life Nana B. Sigourney. Although this will be Miss Carter's initial screen appearance, she has had considerable stage experience in stock and with Elsie Janis in "Miss Information."

Miss Carter was born in San Francisco twenty-four years ago and is the only one of her family who has ever been connected with the film or theatrical professions.

KARR AT WORK ON "PRISONER AT THE BAR," ESSANAY

Darwin Karr, one of Essanay's leading men, is now at work on an exceptionally strong three-act drama, "The Prisoner at the Bar."

Mr. Karr plays the leading role of John Allen, a fisherman who has been robbed of everything dear to him in life by a man who posed as a friend. He finally kills him and is acquitted by the jury.

OVEY AS JERRY IN CUB ON MUTUAL, DEC. 31

George Ovey, playing his original character, Jerry, will be seen in a one reel comedy under the Cub brand to be released on the Mutual Program, December 31. The entire Cub stock company takes part in the picture.

The plot is said to be a series of comedy situations and surprises, in which Director Milton Fahrney has given Ovey full opportunity to share as a laugh producer.

ANN MURDOCK WILL APPEAR IN FITCH PLAY FOR ESSANAY

Ann Murdock, lately leading woman in "A Pair of Sixes," and before that in leading role in successful comedy triumphs, will appear as Trentoni, the feminine lead in "Captain Jinks of the Horse Marines."

She will appear with Richard C. Travers, who has the title role in Essanay's film version of Clyde Fitch's comedy which is now in production at the Chicago studio under the direction of Fred E. Wright.

"Captain Jinks" was first produced in 1900, and was the first starring vehicle of Ethel Barrymore, who appeared in the role in the play which Miss Murdock will fill in the photoplay version.

The scene of the story is laid in New York in 1872 at the time of the campaign of Horace Greeley and General Ulysses S. Grant.

Many of the first scenes of the play are laid in the Republican Club in New York City, and an exact replica of that famous structure is now being built under the eye of Mr. Wright, who has several photographs and ground plans in his possession.

Costumes of the period call for the slightly hooped skirts with the big bustle in the women's dresses and the tight trousers, cutaway coats and black and white stocks for the men. These were made especially for the picture.

DEC. 16 SET FOR SELIG'S "GOLDEN SPURS," WITH BESSIE EYTON

Bessie Eyton and Wheeler Oakman play the leading characters in "The Golden Spurs," a Selig special in two reels, released through General Film service on Thursday, December 16.

THEDA BARA BURNT BY MOLTEN METAL IN FILMING OF "DESTRUCTION"

THERE are many things in the making of a motion picture that are not recognized as unusual by an audience who view the picture as a whole, with the various scenes passing rapidly in assembled continuity before their gaze, but which cause the producer and director considerable thought and worry.

Conditions of this nature obtained when William Fox was producing "Destruction," the latest Theda Bara picture, directed by W. S. Davis.

As the story is one in which labor troubles figured prominently, it required the exterior and interior of a steel mill as a background for the big scenes, and Director Davis took his company to a Pennsylvania town in which one of the largest mills in the country is located.

When the players assembled for action word circulated through the town there was a strike on, and Mr. Davis was besieged by over two hundred men who sought employment.

Later during the taking of riot scenes resulting from the story's strike action, three companies of state millitia and a troop of cavalry were used to add realism in the quelling of the striking mill hands.

Seldom is there a feature picture produced that the taking is not marred by an accident, and "Destruction" was no exception. Theda Bara, the star, was the principal victim, and has cause to remember her first visit to a foundry.

She was standing near a massive rubbing bed which was being poured by one of the automatic ladles. When the red hot metal flowed into it and came in contact with the damp sand, the casting "blew" and showered liquid fire in all directions.

Miss Bara was burned on the hand and shoulder, and forced to remain under the care of a physician for over a week, holding up some of the most important scenes.

The old Kingston Mansion, one of the most historic residences in the entire state of Pennsylvania, was accidentally destroyed by fire during the filming of "Destruction," and the burning landmark will figure conspicuously in the action of the picture.

It is estimated the old mansion had been visited by 87,000 tourists during the last eleven years.

From Pennsylvania Director Davis whisked his company to Vermont, where sections of the Green Mountain State furnished typical New England scenes, while many charming examples of almost forgotten architectural designs add to the beauty of the picture.

"Destruction" is described as a drama of present day life that contrasts the love of luxury and one method of its attainment with the lives and heart-breaking sorrows of working men crushed beneath the heel of an avaricious woman.

While the story deals with capital and labor, it graphically sets forth the evils of the underpayment of the workers and suggests remedial measures.

Assisting Miss Bara in the enactment of the story are such well-known players as James Furey, Esther H. Hoier, Warner Oland and J. Herbert Frank. "Destruction" is announced for release on the regular William Fox program for December 26.

FIRST BOWMAN FEATURE FOR CENTAUR RELEASED DECEMBER 30

THE first Centaur Feature production directed by William J. Bowman, until recently director for Francis X. Bushman, is "The Terror of the Fold," a two-reel drama to be released December 30 on the Mutual program.

The story of "The Terror of the Fold" was written by Theodosia Harris, of David Horsley's scenario staff. The scenes are laid in the woods of the Northwest. Some very thrilling scenes are said to be enacted by the principals in the cast and the Bostock pumas, which are just being brought before the camera.

Besides being Mr. Bowman's first effort for Centaur Features, the picture marks the initial bow in this brand of William Clifford, erstwhile associate of Francis X. Bushman, John Drew and other stars.

Mr. Clifford assumes the leading character, that of a government forest ranger. He is supported by Marvell Spencer in the leading feminine part, Edward Alexander in the character lead, and Howard Millcrest in the "heavy" role.

The Cub Comedy release on the Mutual program for December 17, entitled "The Hold-up," presents George Ovey in the character of a gay Lothario under the always applied name of Jerry. As a swashbuckler, however, he is a questionable success since his proclivities eventually land him in jail.

Besides George Ovey as Jerry, there is in the cast George George as Cyclone Pete, Belle Bennett as Bessie, Jefferson Osborne as her father, Janet Sully as her mother.

THEDA BARA AS SHE APPEARS IN A TENSE SCENE FROM "DESTRUCTION," COMING FOX PHOTOPLAY

"THE TURMOIL," METRO, COMPLETED BY JONES

Edgar Jones has just completed the final scenes in "The Turmoil," a five part Metro wonderplay produced by the Columbia Pictures Corporation, which will be released on the Metro program January 10. Valli Valli is starred in the production.

"The Turmoil" is a picturization of the novel of the same name by Booth Tarkington. The story is an intensely interesting one, in which a man's greed for wealth and fame is so great that he becomes inhuman in the treatment of one of his sons, who longs to write instead of adopting a business career.

The love theme in the picture is novel, as well as beautiful. It is through the subtle influence of the girl in the story that the father's character is entirely changed, and the father in turn arranges the marriage of his son to the girl when circumstances have caused a misunderstanding.

"PRINCE OF YESTERDAY," GAUMONT, COLORED, FOR HOLIDAYS

For the holiday season, the Gaumont company is releasing through Mutual a hand colored film, "A Prince of Yesterday," as a regular Rialto Star feature.

This multiple reel release was taken in mediaeval settings which reproduced exquisitely in color, according to advance reports.

'FRISCO CENSORS PERMIT SHOWING OF "DAMAGED GOODS"

Several weeks ago the Board of Censorship of San Francisco viewed "Damaged Goods," the Brieux story in film form, and after a long discussion decided that it was not a fit production for local audiences.

The film was also shown at a private exhiibtion at the German House to an audience of more than one thousand physicians and professional men, and the opinion of these was to the effect that it would be a mistake not to exhibit it and to give it the widest publicity possible.

In the meantime the Los Angeles censors reached a similar conclusion, to the San Francisco board, but the film was shown in spite of them and the board received such a shake-up as will not soon be forgotten.

The intimation that the film would be shown in San Francisco regardless of the findings of the Board of Censorship doubtless had its effect.

The board finally agreed to reconsider its decision and gracefully acceded to popular demand by permitting the exhibition of the film with its approval, providing the theatre at which it would be shown would be closed to children under sixteen years of age.

The film is now being shown at the Portola theatre on Market street to great crowds, most of the time to full capacity. To accommodate those desiring to see it during the two weeks' engagement the doors of the theatre are opened at nine o'clock in the morning and the performances continue without an intermission until eleven o'clock at night.

KANSAS CENSORS ACT ON CAPRICE IN JUDGING PICTURES

When Jesse Marshall, proprietor of the Marshall theatre, Manhattan, Kas., showed "Despair" the other day, the Rev. Fostus Foster got busy.

The Kansas Board of Censors had turned down the film, but the appeal board passed it, so Marshall understood. But Foster, who with Carrie Simpson, constitutes a specially appointed committee on censorship under the Kansas system, went to the county attorney, with the result that Marshall had to pay a fine.

Foster's version of the matter is that only two members of the appeal board saw the picture, one of whom condemned it.

The search for somebody who understands just what the Kansas censorship law is, continues.

DISASTROUS FILM FIRE IN ATLANTA BRINGS STRINGENT ORDINANCES FOR REEL STORAGE

A SPECIAL committee of the Atlanta City Council met last week in that city and approved a proposed ordinance for the regulation of the manufacture and storage of moving picture films in the city limits. The mayor of the city and a number of representatives of moving picture concerns were present. The action follows the recent disastrous film exchange fire in Atlanta, costing several lives.

It was declared on good authority that the following ordinance would be passed by the City Council without dissent:

Section 1. That it shall hereafter be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation to store or keep on hand any inflammable motion picture films in quantities greater than five (5) reels, or aggregating more than five thousand (5,000) feet in length, without a permit granted by the board of fire masters of the city of Atlanta, upon recommendatioon of the chief of the fire department.

Sec. 2. That no permit for storing or keeping on hand any inflammable motion picture films in quantities aggregating more than five thousand (5,000) feet in length shall be granted within the territory bounded north by Cain street, east by Ivy street and Central avenue, south by Trinity avenue; west by Madison avenue and a line extending from Madison avenue to Cone street, and Cone street.

Sec. 3. No permit for the storage of any inflammable motion picture film shall be issued for any building which is situated within fifty (50) feet of the nearest wall of any public building occupied as a school or theatre or assembly hall or college; or which is artificially lighted by any other means than electricity and which is not equipped with an approved system of automatic sprinklers and which does not contain one or more approved fireproof vaults or safes.

Sec. 4. No permit for storage of moving picture films above the third floor of any building shall be granted and any building so used more than one story in height shall be equipped with approved fire escapes under the direction of the chief of the fire department. Doors and windows leading to fire escapes shall have minimum width of 30 (thirty) inches and height of 78 (seventy-eight) inches and no grating, bars, or any other obstruction shall be placed at or over any such openings. Unless in addition to fire escapes there is more than one means of egress from the building, all openings on the fire escapes shall be equipped with approved wire glass windows in metal frames.

SUNDAY BLUE LAW A LEGAL ABSURDITY, SAYS JERSEY JURY

"SO far as the motion picture shows are concerned the Sunday blue law is a legal absurdity," declared the November grand jury of Hudson County, N. J., in a presentment handed to Justice Swayze on the day of its final adjournment.

The presentment continued, "it is a legal absurdity because the moving picture show today, instead of being a detriment, is an instrument of education and instruction tending to promote the peace and welfare of the community."

Complaints had come to the grand jury, the presentment read, that the Sunday blue law had been openly and flagrantly violated, especially in Jersey City and the northern end of the county.

No true bills were returned in answer to these complaints, so in explanation of this the grand jury set forth its position as regards Sunday motion pictures. It had been the experience of members, it was stated in the presentment, that the moving picture is one of the greatest elements for good.

In discharging the grand jury, Judge Swayze thanked the members of the inquest for the good work they had done and said the relations between court and jury had always been harmonious and pleasant.

Edward Henn, lawyer for the motion picture exhibitors, has collected a vast amount of evidence against business men and others who have violated the ancient Vice and Immorality Act of New Jersey. Mr. Henn states he will present this mass of evidence to the State Legislature next month in favor of the repeal or modification of those statutes generally recognized as obsolete and unjust.

Senator Egan, of Hudson County, announces that he has prepared a bill which he will introduce at the early sessions of the legislature providing for the complete elimination of New Jersey's present Vice and immorality Act passed in 1847.

CHURCHES IN INDIANAPOLIS VIOLATE BUILDING LAWS IN SHOWING PICTURES

Proprietors of motion picture theatres in Indianapolis have complained to Jacob Hilkene, city building inspector, that some motion picture houses in Indianapolis do not comply strictly with the law and that it is unlawful for motion picture entertainments to be given in churches which are not built in such a way as to be governed by the regulations which are made to apply to motion picture theatres.

Mr. Hilkene has suggested that the complaints be made in writing. Then he will take them up for investigation. He says all the motion picture theatres comply with the law in regard to construction, but that some of them allow the aisles of the auditoriums to become crowded.

Warning has been given to proprietors of such theatres, he says, that they must not allow the aisles to become congested. He says he does not believe the churches could be put under the same regulations as the motion picture theatres as long as pictures are given only for one night at a time for educational or religious purposes.

NO MORE SULTAN-LIKE ATTITUDE IN GEORGIA TOWN

The City Council of West Point, Ga., has revoked the law prohibiting the raising of admission prices to picture theatres to more than ten cents, unless an additional license was paid.

This action was taken as a result of the appearance before the Council of R. W. Jennings and C. M. Gailmard, Jr., owner and manager, respectively, of the Vaudette theatre.

The Mayor and one councilman explained that the additional license clause had been imposed to protect picturegoers from exorbitant prices for poor pictures, which, according to the city fathers, had been charged by the former management of the Vaudette.

They admitted that the pictures now being run at the Vaudette, including V-L-S-E features, are certainly worth the admission price. The additional license clause was ordered canceled, and the Vaudette's original license fee was reduced from $50 to $25 by the council.

CENSORSHIP BUGBEAR IS LAID LOW IN MINNEAPOLIS; MAYOR HAS CONFIDENCE IN NATIONAL BOARD

THE film censorship bogie which for a time loomed big before Minneapolis exhibitors has been settled for a few years at least, and quite to the satisfaction of both the city officials and the film men.

The "Birth of a Nation," the attempts of Mayor Wallace G. Nye to stop it and a court action that reached the Supreme Court brought censorship to Minneapolis, but it will be of a mild sort. It will apply only to films that are not passed upon by the national board.

Mayor Nye, believing that the film would incite race prejudice, forbade its exhibition at the Shubert theatre. A. G. Bainbridge, Jr., manager of the house, obtained an injunction and sought to prevent the mayor's order from being enforced.

He contended that the mayor had no right to arbitrarily revoke a license. The lower and supreme courts decided that he had such a right.

Then the mayor declaring that he did not want to abuse the right vested in him, admitted that his idea of the film might not be the idea of the public.

So when Robbins Gilman, head resident of a settlement house, and Karl De Laittre, former president of the city council, proposed that a representative committee of one hundred persons from various semi-public organizations view the film and pass on it, the mayor accepted.

The committee viewed the film, voted by ballot and by ninety-seven to three recommended it.

The mayor said the committee was representative and he allowed the film to run. He proposed, however, that there be a permanent committee from the same organizations but of twenty-five, members only to pass on all films on which there might be a question.

While this committee is a censorship committee it will act only on call of the mayor and the mayor has promised that it shall act only at private exhibitions. Thus there will be no general band of censors invading the picture theatres.

Unless word is heralded in advance that a film passed by the national board is questionable, such films will be allowed to run. Should there be complaints after a film of this kind is run the committee will be called, but the mayor believes that the national board censorship is sufficient.

Hardly one per cent. of films shown in Minneapolis are uncensored by the national board.

CLEVELAND EXHIBITORS ARE MASSING FORCES TO DEFEAT LICENSE ORDINANCE

CLEVELAND, Ohio, motion picture theatre managers are massing their forces to fight a proposed new license ordinance that is to be fathered by Councilman Edward Meyers.

It is proposed to have a minimum license feet of twenty-five dollars per year, with a graduated scale figured on the seating capacity of the local motion picture theatres. It is not known at the present time whether Mr. Meyers will have enough votes back of him to carry the license proposal through the council.

The West Side community council is engaged in the task now of probing motion picture conditions as they apply to Cleveland, and the report of the committee appointed will be announced in the near future.

Advance information is that the community council will declare that censorship as it is practiced in Ohio is a failure and can never be anything else under existing conditions; in fact, the council cannot see censorship at all.

Allen F. Byrne, of the Cleveland Foundation, some time ago made an address before the members of the West Side community council. He declared that he had come to the conclusion that censorship was a failure and told of his observations.

His remarks made a profound impression upon the community council members. The result was that the committee was appointed to investigate the character of motion pictures shown in Cleveland, giving especial attention to the censorship question and how it was working out in the State of Ohio.

President Ben. J. Sawyer, of the northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, is booked to address the council at an early date.

Mr. Sawyer, who has taken a prominent part in the fight against censorship, also is of the opinion that it is a failure and a detriment to the motion picture business.

The community council has given close attention to the attempt to prosecute Sam Bullock for defying orders of the censors in running material put under the ban.

The fact that the community council is lining up against censorship means that the local exhibitors and exchange men have made a great step in their fight against the evils of censorship.

WEEK'S AMENDMENT WILL SAVE SHIPPING CHARGES ON FILMS; CARRIERS WILL NOT OBJECT

MANUFACTURERS, exchangemen and exhibitors will save a considerable sum of money annually without becoming amenable to the law if the proposed amendment to the Act to Regulate Commerce, introduced by Senator John W. Weeks is enacted by Congress.

Under the law as it stands on the statute books, it is incumbent upon shippers by freight and express, or of baggage, to declare the true value of all goods so transported.

In interpreting the Cummins amendment, intended by its author to cover freight shipments only, the Interstate Commerce Commission held that it applied to express and baggage also.

This, according to the representatives of a large number of commercial organizations, has worked a decided hardship on manufacturers and others by compelling them to pay higher transportation charges.

The amendment to this law, as proposed by Mr. Weeks, while in no wise applying to freight shipments, adds a proviso that statements of value will not be necessary when goods are offered for transportation as baggage or express unless the person specifically states that he desires the carrier to assume a risk greater than the normal risk provided for, and is, therefore, willing to pay a higher transportation charge.

It is understood that the carriers will offer no objection to the enactment by Congress of the Weeks amendment.

In and Out of West Coast Studios

Special to Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Dec. 16.

THE Vogue Comedy Company, under the direction of Jack Dillon, last week finished making "Oh For the Life of a Fireman."

This is in the nature of burlesque melodrama wherein a sissy sailor joins the force and is given the several degrees, but he proves equal to the occasion by becoming hero of a factory fire.

The part of the sailor is taken by Patty McQuire; Russ Powell is the fire chief, and Pricilla Dean, the heroine.

"The Girl in the Game" organization of the Signal company is finishing the fourth chapter or episode of the series. Many of the scenes for this were taken on Santa Cruz Islands, off the Coast near Santa Barbara, and contain some thrilling situations and perilous action.

Rosa Crouch has been added to the staff of the Spero company, and will play the lead opposite Sammy Burns in Vogue comedies. She is a former vaudeville performer with a number of years' experience. A portion of the time she played with Mr. Burns on the legitimate stage.

Jacobs Assistant Manager of Spero

Harry Jacobs is a new member of the Spero company business staff as assistant to the manager, M. E. Spero.

The new studios of the company are rapidly nearing completion, and within the next week all laboratory work as well as production will be taken care of at its own plant.

The Universal company, through M. G. Jonas, manager of the West Coast publicity department, has secured exclusive motion picture rights for that part of the annual Pasadena Rose Tournament held within Tournament Park.

A special three-reel scenario has been written and exterior scenes will be made for this during the pageant. The title is "The Trail of the Sun," and Louise Cabasse and Jay Balesco have been selected as leading players for this subject.

A feature of the program in the part will be the championship football game between the Brown team of Providence, R. I., and the Washington State University eleven.

The Los Angeles temple of Shriners, in appreciation of the courtesies shown the members during the past year, have presented Henry McRae, former director general of University City, with a handsome gold watch. Presentation was by the nobles of the temple.

"Discontent" Ready at Universal

The feature subject entitled "Discontent," consisting of two reels, has been completed at the Universal studio.

The story is that of an old soldier, who in his second childhood becomes discontented with his surroundings at a home. When taken to the home of his nephew, he spreads the seeds of the apple of discontent, causing all to become convinced that everything is not just as they would like it, despite the fact that the family had heretofore been perfectly happy in every sense.

The principals are J. Edward Brown, Charles Hammond, Kathrine Griffith and Marie Walcamp.

The sacrifices of a wife for her ill husband who had lost his fortune, and the misunderstandings that result, form the theme for "Born of the People," a three-part photoplay, written and produced by Grace Cunard at the Universal.

The other principals in the subject besides Miss Cunard are Jack Holt and Neal Hardin. The story is that of a stenographer who marries her employer when he has wealth, which is later swept away at the time that he loses his health.

The wife to secure money for medical aid for him, poses in the nude for a well known artist. Years later the husband learns of this after being restored to health and position, when the picture is shown at an art exhibit.

The wife is denounced, and in a rage the husband tells her he should not have expected more, for she was born of the people.

Nestor Comedy with Eccentric Aunt

"When Aunt Matilda Fell" is a Nestor comedy by Al. E. Christie, wherein the man hunting the aunt is caught accepting the love of a disguised weary willie.

Her niece and her sweetheart find this sufficient reason to cause the guardian to soften and permit their marriage. Eddie Lyons and Ethel Lynn are the juveniles; Stella Adams, the aunt, and Lee Moran, a knight of the road.

A Joker comedy company is making "Choose Your Chief," being a comedy around the flirtation of two fire chiefs, both in love with Miss Magneto. The cast is headed by Victor Potel, Ed. Sedgwick and Jane Bernoudy. The subject is being made by Roy Clements.

The Rolin Film Company has just added to its stock company Dee Lampston, said to be the fattest boy west of the Rockies, who will play in Phunphilms. The size of the lad is such that he requires a private Ford, fitted with special springs, to take him to and from location. Rose Mendel has also been engaged to play character parts.

Owing to the increased size of sets for Lasky productions, additional stage room has been found necessary, and an exterior stage sixty feet wide by three hundred feet long is being built.

In connection with this will be a number of dressing rooms to meet the demands of the enlarged stock company. A portion of the new stage will be enclosed with glass and fitted for artificial light.

Portable Light Plant for Lasky

The question of light is not to annoy the Lasky company in the future, for a portable light plant has been added to the equipment which can be moved to any location that scenes may be taken there at night.

The scenario for the screen version of

ILLUSTRATING "HIS NAME IN THE PAPERS," STARRING DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS, A FORTHCOMING FINE ART-TRIANGLE PLAY

"Elevating a Husband" has been completed, and Victor Moore, the Lasky Star, will next play in this.

Fannie Ward, who came to Hollywood for a year's engagement for the Lasky company, and is now appearing in her third subject, "Tennessee's Partner," like many other former legitimate stage people, has adopted California as her future home, and purchased a cozy bungalow in Hollywood.

All of the leading lights of the Lasky studio took part in a Poinsetta fete given by a Hollywood Catholic Church during the past week.

Cleo Ridgely auctioned off a kiss, which went at twelve dollars; Anita King sold chances on a Kissel Kar donated by the manufacturers, and Theodore Roberts, Victor Moore, Camille Astor, and others gave a vaudeville entertainment to raise funds for the church. Jesse L. Lasky and H. O. Davis, director general Universal City, acted as judges.

"My Partner" is a one-reel comedy being made at the Hollywood Vitagraph studio by Director William Wolbert. This was written by W. A. Lathrop, and features Mary Anderson as the belle of a little mining town. Webster Campbell is playing the opposite part, that of a young miner, and others in the cast are Jack Mower and Otto Lederer.

Negative received from Director Rollin S. Sturgeon and company of Vitagraph players, who have been at Bear Lake Valley for the past six weeks, contain some very beautiful sunset and mountain scenery effects, equal to those secured for "The Chalice of Courage," which was made in the same valley about a year ago.

The company has secured a quantity of snow pictures, but the snow has not been deep enough in the valley to afford the desired scenes, and the company is still waiting for a heavier fall.

Three One-Reel Jefferson Comedies

The National company has completed three one-reel comedies, all of which were written by L. V. Jefferson. The titles are "The Heavy Villain," "Chicken a la King," and "Dr. Bill." The principals in these three subjects are "Bill" Parsons, Rena Rogers, Kokoa Baldwin and Rena Kune.

The subjects were made under the direction of Allen Hale. "Chicken a la King" pertains to a husband whose flirting with chorus girls induces his wife to disguise and be one of them for the sake of getting the goods on him. But he recognizes his wife and proceeds to talk to her as a mere acquaintance, telling why his home life is unpleasant and he seeks the company of chorus girls.

Many of the scenes for "Dr. Bill" are laid in the office of an electrical practitioner, in which a caller at the office takes upon himself the work of treating a number who call when the real doctor is absent.

The Rex Universal Company are making the interiors for three subjects at Universal City, exteriors of which were made in the mountains near Arrowhead.

The titles of these are "The Day It Rained," "The Little Thief," and "Yust from Sweden." The principal players in these three subjects are Robert Leonard, Ella Hall and Marc Robbins.

Hand Painted Photos of Myrtle Stedman, Morosco, as "Solveig" in "Peer Gynt," Displayed in the Window of a Los Angeles Jewelry Store. The Building Reflected in the Window is the Orpheum Theatre Just Across the Street

"The Day It Rained" is a portrayal of a story told by a clubman which incorporates the misfortunes that have befallen him on days that it rained. A big feature of this photoplay is that there are no woman characters.

"Little Thief" Features Ella Hall

"The Little Thief" is a crook story featuring Ella Hall as a girl forced by circumstances to act as a tool for gangsters. The child is caught by a bachelor while in the act of robbing his home for the crooks, and seeing her better nature, offers her a home with him which is gladly accepted.

A special feature company of the Universal has been near Phoenix, Arizona, for the past week making exteriors for "The Yaqui," a Broadway feature of five reels, adapted from the story by Dane Coolidge by Olga Printzlau.

The story is one of the persecution of the Indians by Mexican and Latin American officials and soldiers. There will be a number of big battle scenes in this subject in which a leader of the tribe of Yaquis, Tambor, taken by Hobart Bosworth, finally gets his people to safety after numerous atrocities.

The third part of "The Journal of Lord John" series, featuring William Garwood and Stella Razetto for Universal release, has been taken up. The script for this calls for a number of motor boat racing scenes, and the company will go to San Diego, where these will be made.

The direction is by E. J. Le Saint. In this episode the Bertillion system serves to aid the detectives in learning of those who are attempting to get possession of an Egyptian mummy.

"The Millionairess" is a two-reel Universal subject being made by Lynn Reynolds with Myrtle Gonzalez in the name part, that of a woman of wealth who has many trials in the selection of a husband.

The big question is finally settled when she decides to sell her country home. A prospective buyer goes to the estate with a key furnished by the agent, where he is thought to be a burglar, and at the point of a gun forced to become a servant. His identity is discovered by the millionairess, and a romance is consummated.

Sixth Graft Episode Under Way

Director Richard Stanton and company, including Hobart Henley, Jane Novak, Glen White, and Harry Carey, are making scenes for the sixth episode of "Graft." This has to do with the New Hartford railway monopoly.

Traverse Vale, late director for the Biograph company and his leading people, Franklin Ritchie and Louise Vale, have been engaged by the Universal company, and this week took up the filming of a two-reel subject entitled "The Chasm," written by Harvey Gates.

It has been decided to produce the "Pollyooly" stories in a five-reel Universal Broadway feature, and scenario for this has been completed by Ben Cohn. Antrim Short has been engaged to take the part of the Lump, and Ella Hall will play the name part. Direction will be by Robert Leonard.

The Lasky lot was last week filled with one hundred and fifty or more extra people taking part in the trial scenes of Puddin'-head Wilson." There were many descendents of the African race in these scenes, and Director Frank Reicher was accused of making colored photography.

Director George Melford and company, including Fannie Ward as star, Jack Dean, Ray Hatton, Jane Arnold and others, are home from spending a week in the vicinity of Sacramento, Cal, where they found suitable locations for exteriors for the early day Western photoplay, "Tennessee's Partner," adapted from the story by Bret Harte.

One Cub Comedy company has just completed the filming of "Jerry's Revenge," a one-reel subject with George Ovey; and the second company is making "The Circus," with Billy Armstrong and Tom Hayes.

This picture has a very big cast and a large number of extra people. The interior of a circus tent has been built on the grounds, and everything that goes with a traveling organization has a part in this picture.

Five Lions in "Marta of the Jungle"

Five of the trained lions of the Bostock Zoo are taking part in the African scenes of a detective story entitled, "Marta of the Jungle." The opening scenes for this are laid in America, and the plot had to do with the theft of valuable diamonds which are taken to the African jungle. Marguerite Gibson plays the name part, Roy Watson the federal detective, with Stephen Batty the "fence" for the thieves.

Fred Montague, formerly of the Lasky stock company, who has been directing the production of dramas at the Liberty studio at San Mateo, has been added to the cast for the five-reel subject, "The Bait," being made by William J. Bowman for Centaur release. For the prologue of this subject a big Western saloon of the type seen in the timber country was built.

The making of the three reel subject, "Poor Plutocrats," adapted from the Maurus Jokai's Hungarian novel of the same name, has been placed in charge of J. Farrell Macdonald at the Biograph studio.

This is the second adaptation from the works of this author, who is considered the Balzac of Hungarian literature, the first being "The Hungarian Nabob." The cast selected for this includes Raymond Nye, Jose Rheuben, Gretchen Hoffman, Jack Dumier, Chas. Mailes, Ivan Christie and Vera Sisson.

The Biograph Comedy company is filming "What Happened to Peggy," with Vola Smith and Jack Mulhall in the principal parts. Walter Coyle is in charge of the direction.

Russian Marriage Customs in a Fine Arts

The first of the photoplays written by William E. Wing, late of the Selig staff, and purchased by the Fine Arts Company, to be filmed is entitled "Marja of the Steppe."

This will be produced by William Christy Cabanne, with Lillian Gish in the name part. The play deals with the Russian manner of parents disposing of their daughters by marriage for goodly fees, and will be of the nature of an expose of this practise now secretly carried on in the United States.

Such a case was recently brought to light in Los Angeles and tried in the courts here.

The aged bark, the Alden Besse, purchased several months ago by the Fine Arts Company, has been completely overhauled, and during the past week, steamed out of the Los Angeles harbor equipped with a full set of new sails and for the first time in five years was operated under her own power.

The boat, said to be very old, was remodeled to resemble a boat of the Louis XV period and was used for scenes in "Daphne." The Alden Besse has had a very remarkable career.

For a time it served as a slave ship, later was used as a prison boat, and prior to being anchored in Los Angeles harbor, was engaged in the Chinese trade as a training ship for the Japanese navy. Five years ago it made its last trip when it brought a cargo of scrap iron from Honolulu to America.

Seena Owen Shows 15 Gowns

Seena Owen, who appears in one of the principal parts in "Martha's Vindication," Fine Arts Films subject, wears fifteen gowns made especially for this subject at a cost of $1,500. Four of these are of the Lucille negligee, three evening gowns, one tailored suit, two outing suits, and five afternoon dresses.

The third degree as it has been practiced in New York, Chicago, and metropolitan cities, is being portrayed in scenes for "Acquitted," a coming Fine Art subject in which Wilfred Lucas is starred.

The unfair manner is being interpreted in a very striking manner by Mr. Lucas. The story for this is by Mary Roberts Rinehart. A very important part is that of the newspaper reporter, which is being taken by Elmer Clifton. Mary Alden plays the leading feminine part.

"Sunshine Dad" is the title given the next De Wolf Hopper Fine Arts subject. This is in direct contrast with the first subject, "Don Quixote," which has now been completed and shipped to New York.

Prior to the time it was forwarded a private showing was given at the studio projecting room of the Fine Arts studio, when many of the well-known people of the film colony were present as guests of Mr. and Mrs. Hopper.

Among the most prominent were: Dr. and Mrs. Frank Crane, William S. Hart and sister, Blanche Sweet, Frank E. Woods, Mr. and Mrs. Seth Moyle, J. A. Raynes, who prepared the incidental music, Edward Dillon, who directed the production, Chester Withey, who prepared the adaptation, and many of the principals of the Fine Art producing staff.

The second subject gives Hopper the part of an old sport, who does not approve of his son's studious manner. The elder leads a gay life with the chorus girls, which results in getting the son into numerous complications.

In the end, Dad proves himself the winner of a widow, taken by Fay Tincher. William, the nine months' old son of Mr. Hopper has been cast for a part in this picture, which will be his first professional work.

Mr. Don Quicks-it, He is Ready

From the Fine Art studio comes the announcement that the De Wolf Hopper subject, "Don Quixote," will play a special engagement of two weeks at the Knickerbocker theatre, New York, where it opens on December 20. The same date, according to the announcement, it will open at the Studebaker theatre, Chicago, and the Chestnut Opera house, Philadelphia.

Dorothy Gish, who has been at the Eastern studio of the Fine Art Company, is now on her way to Los Angeles, where the second subject, which was to be made in the East, will be filmed.

A three reel story of theatrical life entitled, "It Can Be Done," is being made at the Selig zoo studio with Fritzi Brunette and Jack Pickford in the featured parts. This has an unusually interesting plot, and no expense will be spared in settings that will insure the correct atmosphere of stage life.

Director Colin Campbell has just begun work on a three reel subject, "The Three Wise Men," which will be of a symbolic character. The story is of the present day, with the symbolical features introduced allegorically.

An exceedingly notable cast has been selected for this, including Bessie Eyton, Tom Santschi, Marion Warner, Harry Lonsdale and others.

The last scenes, for the five reel subject, "The Dragnet," adapted from the sketch written and presented on the legitimate stage by Willard Mack, have been filmed at the Selig studio. This is of the nature of a detective story, and one of the last scenes to be made was that of a fight between Harry Mestayer and Al Filson. The later plays the part of a detective, and puts over the best fight scene of his forty years' career upon the stage.

Two Kay-Bee Subjects Shipped East

Two subjects were completed at the New York studio last week and shipped to the Eastern office of the Triangle for release as Kay-Bee brand. One is "The Green Swamp," in which Thomas H. Ince presents Bessie Barriscale and Bruce McRae as co-stars.

In this subject, Miss Barriscale has the part of a young wife which gives her every opportunity for the expression of emotion—just the sort of a role that she has played most successfully. It is a story of domestic difficulties caused by a woman's suspicion of her husband.

There are many splendid settings, one in particular being a mammoth ball room scene where several hundred take part in a masquerade. The supporting cast includes J. Barney Sherry, Lola May, Louise Brownell and Milton Ross.

The second subject to be shipped was that of "Peggy," the Ince-Billie Burke production, which will serve as the screen debut for this actress. The photoplay required seven thousand feet of film, and more than two months have been spent in its completion.

Particular attention was given this subject by the musical staff of the Inceville studio, the incidental score being composed of a big variety of Scotch melodies. The motif of the music is "Peggy," which is an original musical composition by Victor L. Schertzinger, with words by Thomas Ince.

This is the first time an original motif or theme has been provided for photoplay incidental music. Producer Ince is having several one and three sheet originals of an unusual type prepared by his own art staff.

The supporting cast of this picture are William H. Thompson, William Desmond, Charles Ray, Gertrude Claire, Truly Shattuck, Nona Thomas, and Joseph J. Dowling.

MOTHER OF CAPT. MELVILLE DIES IN WASHINGTON

Special to Motion Picture News

San Diego, Cal., Dec. 16.

Capt. Wilbert Melville, manager of the Western Lubin Company at Coronado, accompanied by his wife, left Friday for the East upon receipt of news of the dangerous illness of his mother in Washington. Since his departure a wire received at the Coronado office has brought word of her death.

Julian Lamothe, scenario editor with the Lubin company, will spend the Christmas holidays at his old home in New Orleans, returning here about the first of the year.

During the production of one of the scenes of "A Modern Paul," directed by Melvin Mayo, a basement pool-room in this city was used, and Helen Wolcott, playing leads, had to make a change of costume.

On the second floor of the building there is conducted a rooming-house, and she requisitioned the services of the landlady in the capacity of dressing-maid.

The latter had obtained from some source unknown a very decidedly blackened eye, and a heavy bandage over it gave her the appearance of playing character parts, although she was not given a chance to appear before the camera.

At the conclusion of the production of "His Majesty Plays," B. C. Hayward, who operates the camera for Edward Sloman's directing, expects to leave for Los Angeles, where he will become connected with one of the principal studios.

Mabel Normand, accompanied by Polly Moran, H. E. Chandler and Mr. and Mrs. Vincent Bryan of Los Angeles, has been a guest in this city during the past week.

Miss Normand is recuperating from an accident sustained in a recent motion picture. The party came here by automobile.

FOUR DIRECTORS NOW AT WORK ON PREMIER PRODUCTIONS

Premier Program announces that four of its directors—George L. Le Soir, James W. Castle, Joseph A. Richmond and Hugh Reticker—are actively at work on productions.

Castle is known in the theatre world as the producer of "The Goose Girl" and "Graustark"; Richmond, a former stage director, has also been with Selig and Edison; Le Soir comes to Premier from Europe, where he was producing Tolstoi's "Living Tomb," having previously directed pictures for the Art Film Co., London, and the Imp and Thanhouser companies of this country, as well as for Pathé and Kalem; and Reticker, after ten years as a stage director, was associated with the Motion Picture Sales Co., Imp, Powers and Edison.

C. Edgar Burton, the Premier scenario editor, was until recently proprietor of the Moving Picture Information Bureau.

WEST COAST EXCHANGE MANAGERS OF GENERAL MEET

West coast exchange managers of branches of the General Film Company were called to San Francisco the first of this week for a three days' conference with District Manager H. H. Hicks, at which time the new policy of the General, which becomes effective December 20, was gone over completely.

The exchangemen present were W. H. Cree of Denver; R. P. Madden of Salt Lake City; A. J. Johnston of Butte; George J. Ekre of Spokane; C. P. Merwin of Seattle; L. A. Todd, Portland; J. Vorhees of San Francisco; and Frank L. Hudson and T. C. Malcolm of Los Angeles.

Frank L. Hudson, formerly with exchanges at San Francisco and in other parts of the country, has been appointed manager of the Los Angeles General Film Company's exchange, and went to Los Angeles last week to take up this new work.

He was accompanied by District Manager H. H. Hicks.

Manager G. C. Parsons, of the Los Angeles Triangle Film Exchange, has compiled population statistics of that territory, which consists of southern California and Arizona, which show that all but ninety-eight thousand of the population of these two states will have access to Triangle films weekly, according to contracts now made. The total population of the territory is approximately seven hundred and fifty thousand people.

The rental of the films average seven dollars and fifty cents weekly per thousand population of the territory in which the films are shown.

Mirror Board of Directors Visit Finished Studio

Everything Ready for Production, with the Exception of Electrical Equipment, and Picture Making Will Begin in January, with Nat Goodwin in First Subject

THE newest picture plant to be put in shape for the taking of photoplays is to be put in operation the first of January by the Mirror Films, Inc., at Glendale, L. I.

The board of directors of the company which is composed of a number of men distinguished in business, the professions and the arts, visited the studio this week and found all ready for the beginning of rehearsals and action, with the exception of some electrical equipment which delayed the opening of the studio a month.

The group of directors went to Glendale headed by Clifford B. Harmon, president of the company, and William C. Toomey, vice-president and general manager.

Others who made up the party were Frank S. Hastings, treasurer; Joseph Howland Hunt, John W. Houston, Captain Harry Lambart, Andres de Segurola, Rich G. Hollaman, A. A. Anderson and Harry Rowe Shelly.

The company of visitors was shown about the place by Hector J. Streyckmans, manager of the studio, the man who was the principal aide of Mr. Toomey when the later was vice-president and general manager of the Mutual Film Corporation.

The first star to step before the camera at Glendale in January will be Nat Goodwin. The first two companies organized for work there will be under the direction of Captain Lambart and Lawrence Marston.

Hector J. Streyckmans, who has been made studio manager for the Mirror Films, is one of the best known men in the motion picture trade. He has been through every phase of the business from production to marketing.

His first association with pictures came about through his position as managing editor of the Show World. Later he organized the International Projecting and Producing Company, the first independent company to oppose the licensed manufacturers in 1909.

HECTOR J. STREYCKMANS, MANAGER OF MIRROR STUDIO

His associate in this company was J. J. Murdock. For three years Mr. Streyckmans was in an executive capacity with the New York Motion Picture Company. He was a part of the Mutual organization under Mr. Toomey from its inception until he organized and managed the Pasquali American Company, now the Picture Playhouse Company.

Through him the "Last Days of Pompeii" was released and he handled "The Battle of Gettysburg," as an isolated feature for the Mutual.

Mr. Streyckmans was the originator of and edited the Mutual Observer, a magazine which he ran single-handed. The same magazine is now known as "Reel Life," which is being handled by a sizable staff.

Company Gives New Brightwaters Vitagraph Studio a Housewarming

HOUSEWARMING GIVEN BY RALPH INCE AT NEW VITAGRAPH STUDIO, BRIGHTWATERS, L. I.

THE new Vitagraph studio at Brightwaters, Long Island, recently built for the use of Ralph Ince and his company of players, was officially opened last week by a housewarming in which Ince and his wife acted as host and hostess.

The accompanying photograph shows the happy group and the immense floral piece bearing the word, "Success." Sitting in the center in the fur coat is Ince, who directed "The Goddess," "The Juggernaut," "The Million Bid," and other Vitagraph successes.

His wife is at his right and next to her is her sister, Anita Stewart, the popular Vitagraph star. Standing directly behind her is her new leading man, Richard Turner.

Next to the end at the right is Frank Currier, veteran actor, now director for the Vitagraph.

The new studio was formerly the Forester's Lodge, two stories high and with floor space enough to permit deep sets. It is thoroughly equipped in every particular and a complete staff of workers make their home nearby.

OPEN AIR STUDIO IN USE FOR ESSANAY PRODUCTIONS

The open air studio at the Essanay plant is being used in many productions these days, in spite of the intense cold that has descended on the city recently.

A system of heating under the flooring renders the studio fairly comfortable The studio has been used in the making of "The Misleading Lady," "Blind Justice" and others.

JUST TO MAKE TALK

By LONGACRE

SAITH the biblical poet: "To him that hath shall be given" and he saith sooth, as was demonstrated last week, when "Joe" Farnham, late of Philadelphia, packed up his safety razor and became an active member of New York. As everyone who reads the English language fluently knows, Joe has been handling the advertising and publicity for the Lubin people.

He liked Lubin ideas and Lubin people, but he thought they made a great mistake in locating in Philadelphia, and so when the Ocean Film Corporation, of 220 West Forty-second street, New York, made him a proposition he broke three windows in his haste to get at it. He will be manager of the department of exploitation.

With his usual luck, Joe dropped in just in time to sit in on the Ocean Film Corporation's dinner to its visiting exchangemen. He paused between the entree and the roman punch to give his views on the change. In part, he said:

"I am back from Philadelphia for more than fifty-five reasons, but two of them are sufficient to gain the sympathy of any audience.

"One is that the Ocean Film Corporation has a proposition which appeals to me as by far the best which has ever come to my observation, and remember I have been observing this motion picture industry for lo, these many years; and the second is that Philadelphia is Philadelphia, and New York is New York, and that can't be denied by a single soul which has served a Quaker City sentence.

"The Lubin management—Messrs. Singhi and Lowery—commands from me the highest admiration. I owe an undying debt of gratitude to these same gentlemen for their many kindnesses, and in fact, to everyone who wears the Lubin button; white people, all of them, and they are going to make some history in the nearby days to come—but Philadelphia can't be an alibi for even the best there is.

"I am glad to get back again into the swirl, and to know that connected with the corporation with which I am identified there are men who know motion pictures from beginning to end, and who know what a good picture is and how to make it. You'll hear a great big bundle from the Ocean Film Corporation from this time on."

One of the first Mutual Masterpictures to be produced by the Gaumont studios will be "The Drifter," an original five-reel subject, by John B. Clymer. The story is that of the reformation of a race-track gambler, who ends up as a minister of the gospel. It is said to contain several rather startling and intense scenes. It will be produced by one of the companies now in the South.

For the purely nominal sum of $27.50 "Joe" Brant, of the Universal forces has purchased a niche in the hall of fame, as the first Universalite to talk from New York to San Francisco.

It developed that one day last week Joe wanted to talk to Frank Kellogg, editor of the San Francisco Call. There was nothing to prevent it, except 3,500 miles of mountains, fields, rivers and Democratic sentiment, so Joe, who cares no more for $27.50 than he does for the income from the Astor estate, picked up the receiver, and with a cheery "Hello, Frisco," began a four minute conversation.

It took Anna Wildman, the Universal operator in New York just twenty minutes to get the through connection.

Another score was added to the newspaper men's invasion of the film business last week when E. Richard Schayer pulled a chair up and sat down at a desk in the publicity department of the World Film Corporation. Mr. Schayer has had a rather remarkable career as a newspaper man, for not only has he shone* as reporter, copy-reader and dramatic critic, but he has been known as an actor and stage director.

Heretofore he has confined his activities to the Solar System, but there was always a chance of his branching out. He is one of the few newspaper men in New York who have seen actual service in the trenches of Flanders. Early in the war, Mr. Schayer went abroad seeking adventure and copy. By dropping the c from his last name he was able to enlist in the supply corps of the British Expeditionary force.

His principal work was conducting supply trains from the base at Rouen up to the very front, and he was at work in the trenches during several spectacular and sanguinary charges and artillery duels. When he had gotten about enough, he realized that his enlistment was "for the duration of the war." Then a keen adjutant discovered that there was a c in his surname, and suspecting a Teutonic ancestry, he handed Mr. Schayer an honorable discharge.

Mr. Schayer figured that it took him less than two hours to reach the Statue of Liberty. Since then his experiences and observations on the fighting have appeared in many of the principal American magazines. Young fellow, too.

DE WOLF HOPPER AS "DON QUIXOTE," AND FAY TINCHER IN HER LATEST STREET CREATION

*Yes, "shone" is the proper word.

Comes also John Blanchard Clymer. Not so many years ago we sat on the New York Herald copy-desk with Mr. Clymer, watching the same clock, and exchanging notes of appreciation regarding the same night city editor. And now Mr. Clymer is scenario editor for Pathé Freres! Mr. Clymer, in fact, left the Herald to take up picture work, and has been remarkably successful in several branches of the industry, particularly in the scenario end.

It may or may not be significant, but of the above-mentioned trio, only the night city editor is still on the Herald pay-roll. As some one or other said on some particular occasion, apropos of something or other: "The world do move!"

A select company is really going to "see stars" in New York on New Year's eve. This company has been invited to spend the evening as the guests of Metro Pictures Corporation at the big Rolfe studios. The stars which glitter in Metro Films (see red insert pages in front part of this issue) are all to be there in person, and with the added dignity of the Metro directors, officials and guests, it is likely that a good time will be had by all.

The Gaumont studios in Flushing are making elaborate preparations for the production of Masterpictures on the Mutual Program. Among the more recent activities have been the signing up of Alexander Gaden to play leads in one of the new companies, and Yvonne Chapelle, noted dancer, and Marguerite Courtot. All of these stars will go to Florida, where two companies are already at work.

The Arrow Film Corporation, which is to produce Gold Rooster plays for the Pathé program, is also preparing to send a company south to begin work on one of the features.

Through a rift in the sulphur clouds we observe that Robert S. Doman, of the Universal publicity staff, has left on the relay ship to join the Ford peace expedition, he being the only representative of any motion picture trade journal to be so employed at the moment of going to press.

But whatever may be the fate of the peace expedition, "Bob" Doman will go down in history as the man who got his name on the flag staff of Paul Gulick's sprightly publication, as "city editor." He will join Cameraman Joseph T. Rucker, in Copenhagen, and the two will make it a point to see that the world knows just what happened.

The cinematographers of today are continually encountering, and overcoming new problems and difficulties. Not the least of these is halation. Broad expanses of highly lighted, or polished surface give off a sort of glow, or aura, which is disconcerting to the film, and is apt to ruin an otherwise excellent scene.

This difficulty has been most pronounced in photographing such subjects as sun-lit windows, the glow of light on rivers and lakes, clusters of jewels, spotless linen and Kitty Gordon's back.

Director Chautard, of the World film, is authority for the immensity of the latter problem. In filming the screen version of "As in a Looking Glass," Mr. Chautard used an elaborate boudoir set, into which he introduced Miss Gordon in one of these gowns built on the general architectural lines of Grover Cleveland's suspenders.

When the director had satisfied himself as to which was Miss Gordon and which the pier mirror, the cameraman stopped down to about f16 and went to work. Development of the test film revealed a scene of radiant splendor which at first was mistaken for a view of sunrise in the Vale of Tempe.

Mr. Chautard sent a lot of boys out to get $18.76 worth of talcum powder to sprinkle across the famous shoulders and back before further photographing was attempted.

SELIG PREPARES PUBLICITY MATTER FOR BEACH PICTURE

Virginia Pearson, Vitagraph, has headed a movement to raise funds for the erection of a monument on the site of Poe's grave in the Westminster churchyard, Baltimore.

Miss Pearson, who is an ardent admirer of Poe's works, has contributed $250 toward the project. She has written to many prominent men and women for their support and it is believed that $20,000, planned to secure an appropriate memorial for one of America's greatest authors, will be raised in a short time.

WILLIAM WEST, EDISON, DEAD

William L. West, the veteran Edison character man, is dead at the age of sixty-two. While Mr. West had not been in rugged health for some little while, his end came rather unexpectedly, as he persisted, almost to the last, in appearing at the studio, as he had for over six years. His last appearance was in the Kleine-Edison five part feature, "The Magic Skin," as the old family servant and friend, a character he always did capitally.

Born in Wheeling, W. Va., and raised in Camden, N. J., Mr. West spent thirty-two active years in theatricals. Before he went to Edison, he was for a number of years in stock with Mrs. Spooner in Brooklyn. Previously, he was five years, in "The Danger Signal," with Rosabel Morrison. He left a wife, and two sons; Director Langdon West and Forrest West of Philadelphia.

Mr. West was considered one of the best old men actors in the business, and was loved, both in the studio and on the screen, for his gentleness and amiability.

CHICAGO REEL FELLOWS HOLD LADIES' NIGHT

Special to Motion Picture News

Chicago, Dec. 17.

Wednesday evening, December 15, witnessed the first Ladies' Night of the Reel Fellows Club of Chicago since they became settled in their new club rooms above the Movie Inn.

This took the place of the regular December dinner and the meeting was thoroughly enjoyed by all who attended. Entertainment was furnished by talent hired for the occasion and afterwards there was dancing on the mezzanine floor of the Movie Inn.

LINICK AND MELCHIOR ORGANIZING REGULAR PROGRAM RELEASE

To facilitate the selling of state rights to independent exchanges, the firm of Linick and Melchior, Mallers Building, Chicago, is organizing a program with regular releases to which manufacturers releasing independently are to contribute.

This firm will act as a clearing house for film, handling the program on a small commission basis, assuming in return the expenses necessary for selling and distributing the film.

Many manufacturers will in this way be able to obtain the advantages of a regular program at a very little cost.

UNIVERSAL BEGINS BIG ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN FOR "GRAFT"

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company is bound to make "Graft," its new serial, the biggest thing of its kind in the world, and to this end, Nat. G. Rothstein, advertising manager of the Universal, has inaugurated an advertising service that will be of the greatest assistance possible to theatre managers.

In a book just issued, Mr. Rothstein tells everything that is to be told about the ways of advertising "Graft," explains all the new devices Universal has evolved for local publicity, gives, in fact, the whole campaign complete in all its details. The booklet, by the way, is a striking advertisement of the serial itself. It was described at length in Motion Picture News.

Nat G. Rothstein is a regular advertising man, one of the men of concentrated efficiency and experience in advertising whom the motion picture has brought from success in other fields into its own. Any advertising man who looks over the book will recognize readily the strong touch of one who not only knows every way of advertising but can put into each the heaviest possible punch.

NEW SIGNAL COMPANY TO PRODUCE FIVE-REELER EACH MONTH

Special to Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Dec. 15.

The Signal Film Corporation have completed arrangements for an additional producing company which will make one five-reel subject every month, to be released on the Mutual program.

Ray Myers, formerly director of Reliance subjects made at the Fine Art studio, has been engaged to direct this organization, the players of which are Rhea Mitchell and Hal Cooley, leads, Francis McDonald, heavy, Lillian Hutchinson, character woman, and H. Bredson, cameraman.

The making of the first subject was taken up this week, but the title for this has not been decided upon.

GLIMPSES OF "THE SALAMANDER," A. B. S. MOSS PICTURIZATION OF OWEN JOHNSON'S STORY

"THE SALAMANDER"

(B. S. Moss—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

AN excellent picture has been made out of Owen Johnson's novel, in spite of (or possibly by reason of) the fact that Mr. Johnson's story has not been allowed to worry the scenario writer. The plot has been somewhat torn to pieces and remoulded, and in a more conventional form than the original it lends itself admirably to screen productions.

Moreover, it has been fortunate in falling among skilful hands, both from an artistic and technical point of view. It now stands as a good, "smashing" melodrama, with conventional villain, conventional hero, and conventional wedding scene and red fire to leave everybody happy.

To do this it has been necessary to get nearly all of the people "out of character." Owen Johnson conceived of Dore Baxter as a young girl, determined to make her way in the city; and by spying and recognizing the pitfalls she is clever at avoiding them.

She was wooed by the wealthy Sassoon, Blood, Judge Massingale, and Garry Lindaberry, in turn, and altogether, and finally selected Lindaberry, thereby breaking Massingale's heart, and causing the other two a mild disappointment over their waste of time.

In the picture, Sassoon is a deep-dyed villain, who has euchred Dore out of her home and inheritance, and spurred on by others whom he has wronged, her "mission" in the city is to get even with him. Lindaberry, Massingale, and Blood also aid her, and the true Salamander characteristics are absent.

Sassoon pursues Dore, whom he does not know as the girl whose fortune he has stolen, and at a party at his Newport estate, he entices her into a detached cabin and attacks her.

Lindaberry is on the ground and comes to her rescue. Then an agent, whom Sassoon has gotten into trouble and deserted, appears; there is a terrific fist battle, and Sassoon is thrown over a rampart and fatally injured.

Before his death, he rights the wrong he has done to Snyder, leading woman of Blainey's theatrical company; Lindaberry marries Dore, and the stolen deed to her property is recovered.

No money or patience have been spared in getting attractive locations, and in making the picture all it could be from a technical and artistic standpoint. John Sainpolis is an excellent type as Sassoon, and Ruth Findlay is charming as Dore.

"THE IMMIGRANT"

(Lasky-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM RESSMAN ANDREWS

"THE IMMIGRANT," featuring Valeska Suratt as an unsophisticated girl seeking a better future in the new world, contains many novel scenes, ranging from shipboard to dam-building, and presents a number of East Side types, depicted by a competent cast.

All the vicissitudes in the life of a woman raised from poverty to sudden wealth are shown vividly on the screen, in a story which for sustained interest must depend more upon individual scenes and the excellent acting of the players than its dramatic possibilities. The surprises do not come with the frequency expected in a Lasky production. It must be admitted, however, that the few contained in the play are effective.

An instance of the welcome tense moments in the action is the scene where Walton threatens to have Olga, the sister of Masha, his wife by the left hand, arrested on a charge of murder, though known to both as innocent of the crime, if Masha, the immigrant girl, does not exercise her powers of fascination over Harding, a successful contractor, to keep the young man from a dam just completed by him, while the minions of Walton blow up the structure.

Walton is made a convincing character by Theodore Roberts; the uncouthness of the unscrupulous politician who has raised himself from the very gutter; his lack of moral sense; his insatiable greed; his venomous and uncompromising hatred toward business rivals; his cynical belief in the motives of civic reformers; his refusal to believe in good in man or woman—all this Mr. Roberts brings out with forceful acting.

The support given Mr. Roberts and Valeska Suratt by Thomas Meighan as David Harding; Jane Wolf as Olga, Masha's sister; Raymond Hatton as Munsing, Harding's secretary in the pay of Walton; Ernest Joy as Walton's partner; and Gertrude Keller as Walton's sly-faced housekeeper, is sufficiently adequate to give the photo drama distinction.

J. P. McGOWAN, HELEN HOLMES, FRANK H. SPEARMAN, DIRECTOR, HEAD AND AUTHOR OF "THE GIRL AND THE GAME," THE NEW SIGNAL SERIAL, TOGETHER WITH A SCENE OR TWO FROM THE OPENING CHAPTERS. RELEASED DECEMBER 27.

"THE GIRL AND THE GAME"

(Signal Film-Mutual Special Feature—First and Second Chapters)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

TAKING everything into consideration, there is no ostensible reason why "The Girl and the Game," the new serial produced for Mutual by the Signal Film Corporation, should not be one of the prominent successes of the new year. Star, support, director and story, and above all the several breath-taking stunts performed in this first two chapters, contribute to the general good effect of the pictures.

Helen Holmes, star, and her director, J. P. McGowan, incidentally the two persons who put the railroad picture on the photoplay map, are well known in the great majority of theatres. To say that Miss Holmes is popular is quite superfluous and to credit her with abnormal courage is hardly adequate. Suffice it that when Miss Holmes is called upon to execute a daring leap or any other sensational act she does it clearly and deliberately. There is no jerk in the film, denoting substitution, there is no attempting to persuade the spectator into believing that black is white. It is straight forward, thrilling action which would make a life insurance man turn tail and run.

On the other hand McGowan, with long experience in producing railroad thrillers has learned the most effective methods of putting them on. He gets the most out of the climax. His big scenes are not played at great distances from the camera. They are either closeups or full scenes and the action is always discernible.

"The Girl and the Game" is being written by Frank Hamilton Spearman and in both the chapters already shown he has evidenced an appreciation of picture technique that counts much toward their success. The first chapter works the spectator up to a high pitch of excitement previous to the climax, and the second does the same thing and has the added attraction of an enjoyable beginning of a romance.

The supporting cast headed by Leo D. Maloney, who really deserves to be co-featured, is made up of a collection of players that know their business. Maloney like Miss Holmes is as intrepid a player as ever got within camera range and as Storm the fireman plays realistically.

The story proper has to do with the adventures of Helen, the daughter of a railroad president, and Storm, the fireman and later the engineer. The two children met in their childhood days when Storm saved Helen from a miniature locomotive. In the first chapter, entitled "Helen's Race With Death," she repays her debt to the engineer and saves the life of her father and his associates by averting a collision between a runaway freight and the special. To do so she indulges in a mad ride on horseback and reaches the switch in the nick of time. The freight being side-tracked plunges on into several cars that stand in its path. Previous to this, Helen in riding her mount across a bridge was precipitated into the water by the opening of the draw.

In the second chapter the story begins to develop. The villain is introduced, Seagrue (George McDaniel). He loves Helen but he is the enemy of her father, as he wants the plans of a contemplated railroad cut for his own company.

He hires two thugs, one of whom is played by Director McGowan, and tells them to steal the plans. They are attacked by President Holmes, who gets the worst of the argument and is killed. Helen pursues the robbers in company with Storm. Her daring scene is a leap from one swiftly moving engine to another, and McGowan also furnishes a thrill when he leaps from the tender to a pond of water below.

"The Girl and the Game," with its excellent main theme, its thrilling scenes, and its popular talent, bids fair to be highly successful.

"THE TRAGIC CIRCLE"

("Flying A"—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY 2nd

THIS is about as clever a two-reeler as has come from the American studios for some time. James Picketts, the director, has taken a mediocre story, and with deft sure touches has made it into a delightful bit of entertainment. The acting of Harold Lockwood and May Allison contributes greatly to the merit of the play—and Lockwood is something of a matinee idol besides.

The gloomy, tragic note of the production is alleviated at the end by a laugh and a little mystery—and an audience that is laughing and msytified is a good crowd to have.

Without further analysis, for charm cannot always be dissected, let it be simply stated that this is mighty fine stuff for a program release.

Cater Clifton, a young novelist, is walking in the woods when he comes upon a young man about to commit suicide. He takes the young fellow home with him, and when the boy says he wants to kill himself because his love for a girl is not returned, Clifton tells him a story.

Clifton had been in love with the wife of a doctor, but she loved her husband's cousin, Alan James. James was in love with a girl named Celia, but Celia was in love with Clifton. This tragic circle of conflicting loves brought happiness to nobody but the doctor, who was in love with his work.

The would-be suicide thanks Clifton for the moral, and with a new outlook on life, goes off. The door then opens, and Celia comes in. Clifton says, "I've just been inventing a woeful story for the good of a love-sick young man, dear." The picture closes with a subtitle reading:

"And so it is left to you to decide how much of his tale was true."

"BLACK FEAR"

(Rolfe-Metro—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

THERE is little relief to this story of the workings of the drug habit, and what cocaine especially can do. The hideous profile of the traffic is thrown into sharp relief against a background of refinement, and the emphasis it gains thereby helps out greatly in the production of a strong picture.

There is, however, room for slight criticism for the construction, which shows evident padding in some spots, and the method of dissolving from a full set into a close foreground is ineffective, especially when the action in the two different camera sets does not connect. Fortunately there is not enough of this to weaken the picture perceptibly.

Some of the most magnificent interiors ever shown on the screen have been set in the Rolfe studios; in fact, these studios have much more than their share of this kind of work to their credit, and "Black Fear" gives opportunity for showing several of these. They are faultless—or would be were it not for an occasional glimpse of a painted drop out the window.

These, however, are small points, but it is necessary to pick out small points if one is to criticise this picture; the real essential things are above such criticism. The situations are all well planted and registered, and the climaxes "get across" in every case.

A touch of allegory starts the picture off. Satan, looking for a new agent of destruction, send Miss Cocaine out into the world, and she does what little she can. Wealthy Gordon Ellsmere is ruined in Wall Street, and during a ball, given by his daughters, Lillian and Mary, he plunges to death from a window of the apartment.

The property is sold to satisfy creditors, and the gently-reared family of two girls and a young son is thrown upon its own resources. Billy, the son, gets a job as messenger, in the employ of Horace Ely, an unprincipled man who is pursuing Mary, the younger sister.

Ely induces Mary to take an automobile ride with him, lures her into his apartment and drugs her; the same night Billy, who has been given cocaine, along with the other messenger boys, at Ely's orders, succumbs to long use of the drug and dies in a hospital.

Lillian learns of the cause of death, and goes to Ely's apartment. She arrives as Ely is attacking Mary; Ely hides Mary in an inner room, and faces Lillian; he struggles with her over a pistol; the weapon explodes and he is killed.

Lillian is arrested for the murder; her defense is weak, and she is on the point of conviction when Mary, overcome by remorse, tells her part in the evening's events, and a verdict of "not guilty" is brought in.

The cast is large, distinguished and able. Grace Elliston and Grace Valentine portray the sisters, Lillian and Mary, respectively; Edward Brennan is Judge Le Roy, in love with Lillian, who resigns from the bench to defend her.

Paul Everton, Frank Hannah, John Tansey, Mrs. Allan Walker, Edwin Polk, Albert Hackett and Del Lewis also appear. The direction is the work of John Noble.

"THE SENATOR"

(Triumph-Equitable—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY OSCAR COOPER

WASHINGTON official life is the background in this story which is peopled with real characters. It is handled in such a way as to gain the spectator's interest slowly, work it up by well managed climaxes, and send him away thoroughly pleased.

Charles J. Ross, as a breezy Missouri senator, is the star, and he is the star. His acting is positively refreshing. In naturalness, overflowing good nature, absence of posing, full bloodedness, and a certain romantic air which is easy to recognize but hard to describe, Mr. Ross is surpassed by no screen actor we have seen.

As Mrs. Hillary, who aids the senator in breaking up an intrigue between the wife of the Secretary of State and a scheming count, Dixie Compton creates a lovable character. Joseph Burke does a fine bit of work as aged Senator Keen, who unsuccessfully attempts to put through a railroad swindle. Constance Molineux is a pleasing heroine. The other principals—Ben Graham, Thomas Tracy, Philip Hahn, and Gene Luneska—are all good.

Senate sessions, glimpses of Washington, Great Falls on the Potomac River, a remarkably good set in which is staged the Embassy Ball, and several handsome domestic interiors—the enumeration of these is enough to show that the production is fully equipped with colorful scenes. Joseph A. Golden directed.

In the print shown for review, the photography was at times a little blurred. But this is the sort of picture that would shine through almost any kind of fair photography. And except for slight confusion in getting the plot well started, "The Senator" merits no serious adverse criticism.

In fact, it is a living demonstration of what can be done on the screen when you have a good story as the basis. Everything else follows as a natural consequence. And this follows also: success. That word sums up our view of what will happen to "The Senator."

"FROM THE JUNGLE TO TROUBLE"

(E. & R. Jungle Film—One Reel)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

AS the title may suggest, this is a comedy subject, but one as far from the beaten track as the jungle is from Broadway. It has been cleverly conceived, and worked out with logic and skill, yet its chief attraction and value lie in the identity of the two leading actors and their work.

These stars are Napoleon and Sally, direct descendants of one of the oldest families of chimpanzees in Africa; they have been taken in their native state and educated to a degree of erudition which makes them almost human—in fact, in point of general intelligence they may well be the despair of a number of screen figures which have come under our personal observation.

The human attributes of the primate have never been better demonstrated than in these pictures. The bare burlesque on human action and attitude would provide an unusual fund of comedy, but to this has been added a distinct plot which the chimps act in a manner to excite wonder.

The two are first shown in their native habitat: a tree-top in the jungle. One of them is caught in a trap, and in following the victim to camp, the other is caught. They are then educated, and soon Napoleon is seen engaged as a performer in a vaudeville theatre.

He signs his contract himself, and then is sent home to Sally, his wife, to whom he tells the good news. The next morning Sally keeps her eye on the clock, cooks breakfast, and rolls the sleepy Nap out of bed in time to eat and get off to work. He goes to the theatre in his auto, and there goes through a number of "stunts" on roller skates and the trapeze. Then he becomes involved with a ballet girl, and a meddling stage hand telephones the fact to Sally.

She immediately puts on her bonnet, jumps into a taxi and hurries to the theatre, where she seizes the faithless Nap by the neck, and leaves him with a scarred face, and a closing reflection: "If this is civilization, give me the jungle."

So naturally are all these acts performed that it is hard to believe the chimpanzees are not rational, thinking creatures. The film is not only good comedy, but it is a novelty, and has the unusual quality of being able to arouse wonder and laughter at the same time.

"HEARTACHES"

(Lubin-General-Unit—Four Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

ALTHOUGH the woman with a past has a prominent role in this Lubin feature to be released on December 22, Daniel Carson Goodman has chosen as his central character one of the opposite sex who carries a past full of fiendish actions, many of which descended upon the aforementioned woman, who is innocent of any deliberate crime.

This nefarious character, Cairns, by name, then proceeds to pose as the gallant society gentleman and moves about under the high-sounding title of Stuyvesant Holland.

With his polished manners, which he is able to assume despite his low breeding, he wins the heart of Marion Nelson, a pretty society girl.

Such a situation is productive of a fairly good measure of suspense, for even though one is quite sure that the wronged girl will prevent Stuyvesant from marrying Marion, one is never sure when the situation will be brought to an end.

It is concluded when Kate, the wronged girl, shows Holland up in his real character as Cairns while Marion is secreted in the next room. The villain thus disposed of, it remains for Marion's brother Philip to realize the worth of Kate and so one romance comes to a happy culmination.

"Heartaches" is an average society melodrama that save for its lack of four reel material, will create a moderately favorable impression. As a three-part subject and perhaps even in two parts, it would be able to command a more generous amount of attention.

Francis Joyner as Cairns plays consistently well, while June Daye as Kate appears in a sympathetic part which she carries fairly well. Helen Greene makes Marion an attractive figure, and in addition wears a dozen odd pretty costumes. Jessie Terry, Arthur Forbes and Eleanor Barry appear in other principal parts. Joseph Kaufman directed.

"THE BOOB'S VICTORY"

(Gold Seal-Universal—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

ROBERT Z. LEONARD here discards all vestiges of brainy gray matter, and appears in his favorite role of the boob. And by so doing Leonard presents a comical figure that is the cause of immeasurable humor. With a perfectly blank face, clothes too small for him, and with awkward actions, he gapes and wanders ridiculously through the two reels of "The Boob's Victory" in a way that evokes the words that this picture is one of the best of Universal comedies.

The clever actor-author-director has taken care that he cast himself in a story that, while relying chiefly on its comedy element, also possesses a generous portion of suspense. As the boob he continually studies a book on how to become a detective, and at last his efforts are rewarded when he rounds up a trio of hotel robbers after two bona fide sleuths have failed in the attempt.

The sub-titling has been attended to in a way that corresponds admirably with the sublime foolishness of the action.

THE BOOB EMBARRASSES THE CROOKS

"The Boob's Victory" is by all odds a one-man picture, but the support rendered Leonard is able. Ella Hall and Marc Robbins as the detectives, Duke Worne and Kingsley Benedict in other named roles, give the production a rounded appearance of excellence.

"The Boob's Victory" will accomplish its mission of creating laughter in any theatre. The comedy is appealing to all classes.

"WHAT SHOULD A WOMAN DO TO PROMOTE YOUTH AND HAPPINESS?"

(Barry Macdonald Film Co.—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

THE question with which this subject starts resolves itself into a riddle, and like the riddle of the Sphinx, it remains unanswered. Certainly she should not invade the realm of motion pictures without at least some knowlege of the scientific and technical principles by which the making of pictures is guided—or at least having someone about her who does. All that men have learned of photography, of dramatic construction, of pictorial effects, of logic and sequence in the presentation of a story in pantomime, has been thrown to the winds, and the makers of this subject have wandered off on new lines; naturally, they get nowhere.

As we see it, this picture can serve but one good end. There is a host of amateurs in every branch of the picture-making industry, unlettered and untrained in the technic of the photodrama, and inclined to scorn such traditional and archaic things as stakes and plumb lines. To them it seems that a story which springs from real life, or from the heart, will tell itself, and is only hampered by conforming to set technical rules. Let them see this picture of the cumulative title, and they will realize at once the futility of attempting anything photodramatic without a thorough training in technic. The photography is poor; the exteriors are overlighted and the interiors badly underlighted, and both are out of focus. The direction is innocent of any influence of dramatic rules or of any knowledge of the principle of continuity. The whole might be mistaken for a production arranged by a wealthy family for the entertainment of their closest friends, in their own home. We say wealthy, because somebody must have paid a whole lot of money for it.

The picture is made from Mrs. Barry Macdonald's book of the same title. The story is that of the unhappiness of a woman who has achieved a high state of misunderstanding with her husband. After a number of vicissitudes, she learns that true happiness lies in the perfect love of husband and wife, and the raising of a family. Practically all the interiors are said to have been made in the Macdonald home, in Connecticut. The lighting is so bad that in some cases it is impossible to determine the character of the room shown. In short, it is so difficult to find anything to commend in the picture that a review must necessarily stop right here.

"THE LIFE OF OUR SAVIOUR"

(Pathe-Gold Rooster—Seven Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

AS a special holiday offering, Pathé has had this immense spectacle hand-colored, and placed on the Gold Rooster program. As many of the scenes were taken in the Holy Land and Egypt, the coloring is magnificent, and the pageants and architecture have been utilized to make a gorgeous setting for the great story.

No attempt has been made to screen anything except the Biblical story of the Saviour's annunciation, birth, ministry and death. The subject is in reality a series of striking motion tableaux, following faithfully the story as presented in the new testament—for the greater part by St. Luke. The works of contemporary or modern historians, which have since shed considerable light on the times and life of the Nazarene, have been ignored; even the titling is mostly composed of direct quotations from scripture.

There can be no complaint against this picture from any angle; the subject is handled reverently, and the figure of Christ is invested with a stateliness, which agrees well with the popular conception of the Saviour. There is, however, a spirit of worldliness about the principal characters, which sits better on Caiphas and

THE ENTRY INTO JERUSALEM

Pontius Pilate than it does on the Supreme Figure, and on Joseph and Mary.

One could also wish that the great possibilities of trick photography, double exposure and dissolves, had been used in the scenes depicting the annunciation to the shepherds, and the miracles. They would seem less material and matter-of-fact.

The departure into Egypt, and the rest beside the pyramids and Sphinx are impressive, as is also the entry into Jerusalem, with the hosts spreading the palm branches and shouting their hosannahs. Although many of the scenes were taken in France, the locations were evidently selected by some one familiar with the topography of the Holy Land, as the landscapes and architecture are convincing. For the greater part the piece is well cast, and the immense throngs of supers well-costumed and drilled. The subject is a most appropriate and timely offering for Christmas week.

"WHO KILLED JOE MERRION?"

(Vitagraph-Personally Picked Program—Four Reels)

REVIEWED BY OSCAR COOPER

FEW pictures with a murder as the central incident have been produced in such good taste as this one. All weird sensationalism, both in mechanical effects and in acting, has been eliminated, and the story is presented in a straightforward fashion.

THE JUDGE BANISHES HIS SON

An appreciable amount of suspense attends the action. An eminent jurist, wearied of his son's follies, banishes him. The boy's mother dies of a broken heart. One year later Joe Merrion, a bookmaker, is found dead in a train, and a friend of the jurist's son is sentenced on circumstantial evidence to prison.

A fragment of a photograph, the only clue, comes into the jurist's possession, and he discovers that his son is the real murderer. He permits the boy to escape. The convict, entering the judge's home at night, kills him, and the son, returning, finds his father dead. To atone for murdering the judge the convict keeps silent about the murder of Merrion.

Joseph Kilgour is an impressive figure as the judge, though his acting is at times a little stiff. S. Rankin Drew makes the weak son convincing. Betty Gray is charming in a slender role. J. Herbert Frank, as the convict, is good. Other players are Mabel Kelly, Denton Vane, Rose Tapley and George Stevens.

The interior sets, particularly the views of the judge's home, are handsome. The trial scene is well staged and directed, and variety is afforded by glimpses of races at Belmont Park. Tefft Johnson, the director, exercised care and skill throughout. Beatrice Heron-Maxwell wrote the story.

As a whole the picture is calculated to interest, without offering any remarkable qualities.

"HER MOTHER'S SECRET"

(Fox Film—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THE appeal of this picture lies mostly in the various female characters. Every one of them suffers tragically because of the double life led by one careless male. His wife, his mistress, and his daughter by the latter, are the martyrs.

The wife undergoes tortures when she is acquainted with her husband's double life. She is killed at length in the explosion of a motor boat. The other woman lives to rear her nameless daughter only to have her fall in love with her half brother, and as a result the broken hearted maiden seeks oblivion in the turbulent ocean waters.

"Her Mother's Secret" appeals strongly through its individual characters. Its story by Martha Woodrow has an introduction that consumes half of the picture. In fact it is a story in itself, rather than an introduction, and every minute of the time it holds the screen one expects it to end with a "years later" subtitle. The film anticipates such action, however, by informing the observer that the first part of the story transpires in the year 1895, and consequently it is expected that after a few preliminary scenes the action will shift to a more recent date.

The direction of "Her Mother's Secret" is entirely commendable. The atmosphere of the period is convincingly portrayed, while the sea coast scenes, most of them filmed on wild, windy days, are really beautiful. The photography is subdued, yet satisfying throughout.

Frankness is a pronounced quality. The characters and their relationship to one another are treated openly and clearly.

Ralph Kellard is seen as the reprobate father and also as the son, and does good work in both parts. Dorothy Green is a fascinating young girl, who comes to such a sorrowful end. The rest of the cast fulfills well its strenuous requirements.

"A SOLDIER'S OATH"

(Fox Film—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

WILLIAM FOX has in this feature an excellent production from the standpoint of story, direction and interpretation. It is a picture that produces dramatic crises continually and with these scenes played with strong emotionalism by the leading performers, they possess the worthy pictorial quality of bringing tears to the eyes through sheer human interest.

Thanks to Oscar Apfel, who directed as well as shared in the concoction of the scenario with Mary Murillo, there is comedy relief a-plenty. "A Soldier's Oath" would be too intense if it were not for several light comedy touches scattered carefully between the heavier moments, punctuating their intensity in appreciable style.

"A Soldier's Oath" has a theme that reaches the sympathies through one of the easiest though strongest channels—a downtrodden, misrepresented hero and a villain who is so firmly intrenched in a safe and moneyed position that his dislodgement seems next to impossible. With this situation ever in prominence, the plot develops by way of an unusually strong series of prolonged climaxes until at last justice is meted out to both men.

William Farnum, as the French soldier, gives the best and most versatile performance that we have ever seen him render. Frequent use of closeups has exhibited his varied expressions and his several outbursts of stormy emotion to the best advantage.

Dorothy Bernard is attractive and handles the few opportunities of her small role as a soldier's wife very well. Ruth Findlay makes the daughter delightfully human, while little Kittens Reichert playing this role in the first part of the picture, shows astonishing ability.

Apfel's direction as to settings and continuity deserves special mention. His few war scenes, though not expansive, are realistically suggestive, in particular the night effects. The allegory showing the Reaper wandering and gloating over the battle field is an impressive bit.

A piece of excellent realism is introduced when the officers of the army are seen holding council in a devastated, roofless, perforated house. Throughout the camera work adds greatly to the general excellence of the production.

The story tells how a soldier who had been given the trust of identification papers by a fallen officer is robbed of them. The thief, to cover his act, murders the wife, and circumstantial evidence convicts the soldier of the crime.

After years of imprisonment and hardship the soldier locates the betrayer, and after laying bare the usurper's character, he has the satisfaction of seeing his daughter made happy with the heir of the dead officer.

The powerful and at the same time sympathetic theme of "A Soldier's Oath," together with the popular and capable cast and the worthy direction, places it among the real A-1 features of late release.

"THE REFORM CANDIDATE"

(Pallas-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM RESSMAN ANDREWS

MACLYN ARBUCKLE is seen in "The Reform Candidate" as a hard-headed politician beneath whose broad, expansive coat beats a heart full of sympathy for the week, the helpless.

Art Hoke, the cool, calculating political boss, with whom a November election is an event to be won at any cost, is not always the ruthless schemer bent on maintaining power at the expense of everything else.

To be sure he is bluff and unmannerly in his ways at times. Hs is a great believer in muscular tutelage as an aid to decision with refractory voting followers, and knows when to show no compunction in driving home the lesson of minding one's business by knocking down an unwilling pupil with a right good will.

But Hoke's sensibilities are touched by suffering, he sympathizes with the poor in their eternal struggle against want. His hand, as big as a young ham, is just as ready to dive deep in his pocket for practical help as it is ready for corrective purposes. And the same member, large and uncouth as it is, can pick up a mite of a youngster in swaddling clothes with the gentleness of the small and dainty hand of the child's own mother.

But Hoke hadn't the faintest idea who the mother was. He found, one day, the little bundle of humanity in a chair of his bachelor home, its presence a mystery to him. But his housekeeper, a knowing old dame, makes a wry face as poor Hoke expresses wonder at the sudden appearance of the infant. But she soon sees that his disclaimer of any previous knowledge of its existence is genuine

The pitiful friendlessness of the tiny visitor moves him to compassion and he decides to make his home the child's home. Hoke did not know for some years how he had been made the startled hero of a domestic drama without a mother staged suddenly under his uneventful and decorous rooftree.

"Looney Jim" often followed his benefactor around like a faithful dog on Hoke's errands of mercy to families in need of assistance. When Looney Jim saw Hoke pick up a child and dandle it in a fatherly way, the action put his slow wits to work. He conceived the magnificent idea of stealing the first occupant of an unwatched baby carriage and surreptitiously making Hoke a "present" of it. Hoke, unable to return the child to its parents, adopts it, and she grows up to beautiful womanhood.

The photography and lighting are excellent. The acting of the cast, including Forrest Stanley and Myrtle Stedman, leaves nothing to be desired, but a clearer understanding of the plot would be obtainable by the introduction of a few more subtitles.

ILLUSTRATING A FEW SCENES IN "A DAUGHTER OF THE CITY," ESSANAY PHOTOPLAY, WITH E. H. CALVERT AND MARGUERITE CLAYTON

"A DAUGHTER OF THE CITY"

(Essanay—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY OSCAR COOPER

"A DAUGHTER OF THE CITY," with Marguerite Clayton and E. H. Calvert in the respective roles of innocent girl and middle aged roue, who seeks to get her in his power but fails, is a picture with a moral. The moral is not driven home with the conventional "punch," but is unveiled slowly, and with a considerable amount of suspense and complication.

The fact is, it is the roue's wife who finally reveals her knowledge of what he has been doing all the time, by adopting the very girl he is attempting to ruin. Then she sends for the girl's old-time sweetheart, sees the young people happily married, and thus defeats her husband's scheme of evil. He does not reform. A final close-up shows him cynical as ever.

Though her part does not permit her to rise to any great dramatic heights, Miss Clayton is pretty and pleasing. Calvert, of course, is an accomplished actor, as well as a good director, to both of which assertions this picture bears witness. Other characters are well taken care of by Ernest Maupain, Camille D'Arcy, Betty Scott, Florence Oberle and John Junior, all of them Essanay favorites, upon whose ability to play in dramatic unison we have remarked before.

The picture is put on in excellent style, and its dramatic possibilities are brought out by Calvert's careful direction. Sets, for the most part interiors, are fairly above criticism, and are in keeping with the ultra-modern tone of the production.

All of which means that a good many people will be interested in it. It is an out of the ordinary version of the pursuit of innocence by a social vulture, and it is presented in an acceptable manner. H. S. Sheldon's play forms the basis of the story.

"FORBIDDEN FRUIT"

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

DRAMATICALLY strong and pointing fearlessly to a moral which, however delicate, is forcible, "Forbidden Fruit," the latest of the Ivan features written and directed by Ivan Abramson, makes its appearance in its particular field of picture literature.

Mr. Abramson is as usual clear and decisive, but with the case of the production in hand he has handled several difficult situations with a suppressed yet striking nicety that bespeaks well for his ability as a photo-dramatist.

"Forbidden Fruit" is, we believe, the best of Mr. Abramson's pictures. Its direction is very good, conforming well with the character of the theme. The story, aside from its moral value, which may or may not register according to the character and state of mind of the audience, is constructed in fitting fashion.

Stress is laid on the strongest of the situations, and the scenes introducing such moments have been developed advantageously and with a keen perception of their value. Mr. Abramson's scenario builds to a strong slimax which is ultimately followed by a happy ending brought about through the awakening of the husband.

Ruth refuses Edward because of his double life and accepts Henry because of the clean existence he leads. Henry, in sore financial difficulties, forges Edward's name on some bonds, is discovered, and is sent to prison to await trial.

Ruth goes to Edward to beg him to withdraw his charge against her husband. Edward, who has by this time become quite a rounder and by so doing has weakened his entire system until he is on the verge of serious tubercular trouble, tells her that he will let the case drop if she is willing to pay the price.

She pays. Years later we see Ruth and Edward with two children, a boy and a girl. The former, the younger of the two, has Edward's old trouble. The death of Edward brings about a disclosure of Ruth's former deed that liberated her husband and man and wife separate. But later Henry realizes that all their sorrow is due to his act of forgery and through the children the two are again united.

THE REFUSAL

Paula Shay as Ruth gives a most satisfactory performance, while Everett Butterfield plays well as Henry. James Cooley as Edward, the heavy, is very convincing. The child players, Kittens Reichert and Walter Gould, enact their roles with startling intelligence, while others are Minna Phillips as Ruth's mother, June Janin as Dolly, a cabaret performer, and Daddy Lewis as Ruth's father.

SELIG POLICY OF STRENGTHENING ONE AND TWO REEL SUBJECTS GETS UNDER WAY

Los Angeles, Dec. 15.

THE policy recently adopted by the Selig company, that of strengthening their one and two reel subjects, was made known this week at the studio when casts were selected for two one-reel subjects. One of these is entitled "Her Dream of Life," in which Harry Mestayer and Grace Darmond will play the important parts. The drama is by Lottie Beckelman.

The other one-reel subject taken up has been given the title "The Uncut Diamonds." This has a cast of ten people with Britzi Brunette and Edward Peil in the principal parts, and the cast includes C. J. Lemoine, Lilly Clark, James Bradbury, C. C. Dromgold and others.

The scenario is by Emma Bell, and is of a detective story nature in which the mystery is not cleared until the last fifty feet.

"LANDON'S LEGACY"

(Broadway Universal Feature—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

WHEN a producer tackles a story that relies for the greater part of its interest on the clashing of forces and cunning of a group of Peruvian villains and a dauntless American engineer, his is a difficult undertaking.

"Landon's Legacy" has such a plot, but the results show to very fine advantage; in fact, if the exhibitor desires a feature that is full of hair-raising moments, narrow escapes, some romance and a scintillating portion of comedy scattered here and there he will do well to procure this latest Broadway Universal Feature.

J. Warren Kerrigan has always maintained a coveted position among the romantic and adventurous screen actors of the day and his performance here is most appropriate in its liveliness and debonair qualities. Incidentally this is his debut on the Broadway Universal Feature list, and no romantic player of the stage could usurp Kerrigan's place in "Landon's Legacy."

The picture is an adaptation from a story by Meredith Nicholson, done by Walter Woods. The original is to run in Collier's Weekly of January 8. The central character is Jack Landon, an American mining expert, who by his progressive methods incurs the enmity of the Peruvian governor and his villainous aide. Through the major portion of the five reels Landon is continually ducking and preventing the attempts of the two "greasers" on his life.

Later Landon inherits a young ladies' seminary from his aunt and visits it to rest from his strenuous life-saving activities. But here he encounters the governor's aide and his female companion plotting against the Peruvian's pretty daughter who is a pupil in the seminary.

Naturally Landon rescues her and by so doing at last makes friends with the governor.

Otis Tuner, director, always ready to introduce the spectacular, has erected an entire village street set for the majority of his scenes that take place in Peru. It is a very well done slice of realism and with the added spectacle of many people walking the street and even acting when the occasion demands, it counts much toward the good effect of the entire picture.

"IT'S A GREAT COUNTRY"

There are one or two slight slips in the New England scenes which are brought in when the action goes to the seminary, but otherwise the production has been staged very well indeed.

Lois Wilson is pleasing as Pepita, the female lead, while Maude George is as usual effective in a heavy role. Bertram Grasby and Harry Carter are respectively seen in the roles of the governor and his aide, while G. A. Williams and May Talbot complete the cast.

There is much about "Landon's Legacy" that is different from the ordinary run of pictures. For instance, the shooting off of our hero's hat is done in startling fashion, the seminary scenes are very real, and on the other hand the touches of comedy are there to laughably relieve the intensity furnished by the American's various escapes.

"A PRINCE OF YESTERDAY"

(Gaumont-Mutual—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

SELDOM is a more magnificent film offered to the public than this subject from the Gaumont laboratories. Infinite pains have been added to artistic conception of a high order to produce something absolutely pleasing and charming to the eye. The scenes, laid in France, have all the extravagant floral decoration which nature has spread over that land, and the picture has been carefully hand colored in such manner as to emphasize these beauties.

THE PRINCESS AT A RENDEZVOUS

In interior settings the picture will rank with the finest ever produced, and the garden and woodland glimpses are alurement itself. The play is a costume drama, of mediaeval fairyland times, and both costume and location are apt subjects for the colors so lavishly furnished. The gardens are vast terraces of marble and sward, embellished with statues and fountains, and the interiors are wide halls, balustrades and galleries, ornamented in the rich and costly manner of ancient Antioch.

The Prince does not fall kindly in with the demand of the council that he marry the Princess of a neighboring kingdom, whom he has never seen. He wants nothing of love, and induces the Duke to take him traveling. The crafty Duke conspires with the councillors of both kingdoms, and it transpires that the Prince in his travels, discovers the convent of Palladio, and in the cloisters, a maid who wins his heart.

A clandestine love affair starts, and is ended only when the girl is suddenly withdrawn from the convent. He follows her faithfully, and finds her housed and guarded in a magnificent castle; but love finds a way, he meets her at night, and they pledge their troth. Then both the young people learn to their amazement that they are the Prince and Princess which the councils of the two nations intended to bring together from the first, and everything ends happily.

This is one of those pictures which will appeal strongly to everybody between the ages of four and eighty-four years.

KULEE COMPANY GIVES EASTERN BOOKING RIGHTS TO "MOLLY" FOR ATLANTIC COAST STATES

THE Kulee Features, Inc., who made "How Molly Made Good," reports more state rights sold for six new territories this week. The General Feature Film Company of Chicago has been foremost in the ranks of bidders for "Molly" stock. Early in November the company bought the state rights for Illinois. Last week the company took over Indiana, Kentucky and the southern circuit in Wisconsin.

The Eastern Booking Office is launching the film in the Atlantic Coast States. Last week it bought state rights for Pennsylvania, Delaware and Philadelphia.

Harry I. Garson, of the Broadway Feature Film Company, Detroit, has taken "How Molly Made Good" for Michigan.

NEWS PICTORIAL

(Formerly · HEARST-SELIG · Now Better)

ADVERTISING

NOT only is Hearst-Vitagraph the product of the news-gathering staff of all the Hearst organizations—the International Film Service, International News Service, the New York Journal, the New York American, Chicago Examiner, Cosmopolitan Magazine, Hearst's Magazine, etc.—but the Hearst-Vitagraph will be promoted under a plan of merchandising and advertising such as hitherto has been confined to ordinary commodities.

If it is possible to sell Jack London's books or Ivory soap by a scientific campaign of sales, how much easier it is to sell a picture.

The men behind the promotion of Hearst-Vitagraph are experts in their line, just as the men behind the technical perfection are the best to be found.

The appeals that are going forth now, and are to go forth consistently as long as Hearst-Vitagraph exists, will be that sort of announcement which gets "under the skin" of the ordinary men and women and makes them go wild to see Hearst-Vitagraph. (Full schedule and proofs of advertisements mailed on request.)

PUBLICATIONS

Among the publications which will be employed in carrying forth the story of Hearst-Vitagraph to your folks will be not only the national publications, but the newspapers which are read every day by regular theatregoers. The list includes the New York Journal, the New York American, Chicago Examiner, Boston American, San Francisco Examiner, Los Angeles Examiner, Atlanta Georgian, Chicago American, Harper's Bazar, Good Housekeeping, Hearst's Magazine, Motor, Cosmopolitan Magazine and other equally powerful forces.

Lasting Advertising

While the advertising that is going forth now is to make known the advent of Hearst-Vitagraph, what we want to tell you about is that which is to follow.

At regular stated intervals there will be prestige-building announcements making more valuable the name of the Hearst-Vitagraph to your theatre and making your theatre more renowned in your city because of its connection with the Hearst-Vitagraph.

Making It Easy to Find Your Theatre

Whenever a big, sensational "scoop" is made by Hearst-Vitagraph—and you may be sure this will occur many times during the year—there will be telegraphic advertisements issued through our regular list of exhibitors.

At regular intervals a list of theatres showing Hearst-Vitagraph will be published as a handy pocket memorandum and will be given to the public to keep.

In this way we make it easy for those who are impressed with the greater news reel to find the theatres that are showing the reel.

"THE MYSTERY OF CARTER BREENE"

(Centaur-Mutual—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

THE mystery in this detective story has been kept alive, and progressive with cumulative interest, in a skilful manner. As a matter of fact, it is the tantalizing mystery alone which carries the story, as the romantic element is light and obvious. There is a murder, and a false charge against the daughter of the victim, and the labors of her sweetheart to unravel the case and set her right. In addition to the suspense, there are a number of physical thrills which strengthen the subject, generally.

Wealthy Carter Breene is found murdered in his room after having a quarrel with his son, who has become a victim of drugs.

THE ACCUSATION

The district attorney, who has attempted to force his attentions on Margery Breene, daughter of the murdered man, is repulsed, and in return, a charge of murder is brought against the girl.

She is saved from the police by Allan Dare, a young gentleman of leisure, who disguises his white car in black, and holds up the police automobile. She is secreted at his house, and while Dare steals into the Breene home to investigate the murder, a masked man enters and places her so that she will be killed by anyone who opens the door.

Dare finds an opium pipe, with definite finger marks on it, in the room where Breene was killed; going home, he sees a masked man leaving the premises, and instead of entering the usual way, he crawls in through a window, thereby saving Margery.

In the room he finds another opium pipe, with similar finger marks. The police find margery, and take her away in the auto, but the masked man has changed the signs at a crossroad, and their car dashes over a precipice into the water. Dare, who has followed, rescues Margery, and reveals Arthur Breene, the son, as the murdered.

The piece was written by Crane Wilbur, and directed by Robert Broadwell. In the cast are Crane Wilbur, Celia Santon, Gordon Mullen, J. H. Lynch, Carl von Schiller, Edward Collins, Mrs. Spencer and Mr. Singh.

"NO GREATER LOVE"

(Selig—V-L-S-E—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY 2nd

ALTHOUGH the sub-titles indicate that the locale of this picture was California, the settings, characters, and acting are obviously French. This Gallic flavor by no means lessens the value of the piece, however, for the settings are magnificent, and the acting, while a bit more exaggerated than the American sort, is exceedingly vivid.

The introduction in several scenes of a dancer in semi-undress may give some exhibitors an excuse to bill the production as daring, but as a matter of fact there is nothing to offend the good taste of the most conservative clienteles. The story is highly melodramatic, parts of it savoring not a little of "Macbeth." William Le Quex was the author, and he uses passionate mother-love as the basis for the story.

Regina Badet, the star of the production, an emotional actress with a large following in France, has appeared previously in a few pictures for American consumption, and has acquitted herself well.

Sadunah, the dancer, attracts the attention of a rich financier, who finally marries her. Sadunah's sole interest in life is the welfare of her daughter. When the girl becomes engaged to a count, the mother rejoices.

The financier is discovered in a crooked deal, and it is necessary for him to obtain money at once to avert disgrace. Sadunah urges him to kill his rich uncle whose will is made in his favor. This he finally does, but overcome by remorse, he dies shortly after.

An admirer of Sadunah's daughter obtains evidence of the murder, and threatens to divulge the truth unless the mother forces her daughter to marry him. Rather than spoil her daughter's happiness, the devoted mother hurls this suitor and herself over a precipice, where both are killed.

"THE GREAT DIVIDE"

(Lubin-V-L-S-E—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY OSCAR COOPER

ONCE again the picture demonstrates its immense superiority over the stage in respect to natural settings. For while the stage version of William Vaughn Moody's play could only present a small view of an artificial Grand Canyon, the screen version shows the Grand Canyon itself.

Against a background of such grandeur an impressive story is thrown. But Director Edgar Lewis did not make the mistake of permitting the scenery to dwarf the action. If he had, we would have seen an extraordinarily good travel picture, but an unconvincing play. The Canyon's heights, depths and shadows accentuate the dramatic situation between Stephen Ghent, an untamed Westerner, and Ruth Jordan, a product of culture and refinement.

The story follows the original play in its general outlines, but the ending is not the late Mr. Moody's. After Ghent has stolen Ruth, taken her to his cabin, broken his promise to regard her as his wife only in name, earned her contempt, saved her from death in a landslide, and finally been worsted in the battle between the weak and the strong, Ruth is rather suddenly won over to him when she discovers that he has been sending money to her mother in the East.

Such a denouement necessarily omits Ruth's return to the East, the following of her there by Ghent, and the final struggle in which, according to the original play, Ruth eventually recognizes Ghent's worth, even though hitherto The Great Divide of tradition, environment and character has separated them.

But the picture is good. It is good because Anthony P. Kelly built the scenario, because the setting is extraordinary, and because the cast does its work well.

TWELFTH KNICKERBOCKER TRIANGLE PROGRAM

("The Hunt"—Keystone-Triangle. "The Despoilers"—Kay Bee-Triangle. "Don Quixote"—Fine Arts-Triangle.)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

THE introduction of Don Quixote as a five-reel comedy has made necessary some little re-arrangement of the Triangle program for this week. With such a stupendous comedy as this advanced as a feature on the bill, the usual "comedy relief" is hardly necessary, and consequently the Keystone offering leads off the program instead of being used as a great divide.

The Keystone subject is the same good fast comedy which Triangle patrons have come to expect. Elaborateness in setting and faithfulness in detail, unusual in a purely farcical subject, are pronounced, and the picture has all the more attraction for that reason. Ford Sterling is featured in blackface, and he gets his humor across with a splash.

He is groom to one of a party of huntsmen, gathered at a magnificent country estate for a morning chase. While the daughter of the house is attempting in vain to decide between two suitors, he invades the kitchen, and there becomes a formidable rival for the affections of the negro maid, who is beloved by the chef.

He is so successful that the disgruntled chef decides on a magnificent revenge, and after the hunt has started, the chef deftly inserts a herring into the torn sole of his rival's shoe. A pistol shot sends the startled groom scurrying across the fields, and incidentally he crosses the trail of the fox, and the hounds pick up the scent of the herring.

They trail him to a rocky cave, where he is captured by the huntsmen, much to the chagrin of one of the daughter's suitors, for she has ruled that the man who catches the fox gets her also. The other suitor, left behind, has inadvertently taken the right trail, and catches the animal.

The same mix-up occurs after the wedding, for the groom and the maid are married at the same time, and the carriages, starting for the station, cross trails, and the wrong welcoming parties greet the right carriage, and vice versa.

"The Despoilers," a vehicle for the presentation of Frank Keenan, is an unusually heavy and impressive piece of work. The quality of its settings, and especially the acting of Mr. Keenan, should carry it.

The producers have shown marvelous skill, ability, resource—but hardly good taste. A title announces the picture as "a protest against the violation of women in time of war." Whether such a subject calls for protest is a subject for someone else to argue.

As a matter of fact, we have long understood that the practice is generally frowned upon by the best people, especially in this country, and the need for "protest" is hardly insistent enough to make palatable an exploitation of the purely bestial passions of primitive humanity, even to the minutest detail.

We are not squeamish in such matters, but we know a number of people who are. Yet the work is wonderfully well done, in every respect, and from a technical and artistic standpoint must call forth the greatest admiration.

The story is by J. G. Hawks and Thomas H. Ince. Colonel Damien has a young daughter. The Emir, commanding a horde of barbarians, allies of Damien's troops, looks with covetous eyes on the girl. Later, when Damien takes a nearby village, with instructions to seize a fund of money raised for the enemy, the burghers refuse to give up the gold, and acting on the urge of the Emir, Damien gives them an hour to reveal the hiding place; failing that, he will release the barbarian troops among the women who have taken refuge in the abbey.

In the meantime his daughter, attempting to join her father, has reached the abbey, and has hidden there. The money is not forthcoming, and the Emir leads his men to the abbey. He recognizes the Colonel's daughter. She pleads for the other women, and he offers to respect them if she will sacrifice herself to him. She consents.

In the morning, dragging herself half dead from the room where she has been locked, she finds the Emir in a drunken sleep, and the sight of his pistol gives her an idea; she seizes the weapon and kills him.

Damien, arriving to find his ally dead, demands that the murderer be given up. A veiled woman is led before him; she confesses the murder, and he orders the firing squad to do its duty. The girl is shot down, and then the abbess lifts the veil and reveals the face of the Colonel's daughter.

Then the Colonel wakes up. He has been dreaming, and it is not yet the end of the hour which he had allowed the burghers. The Emir comes in, to demand the privilege of descending on the abbey, but roused by his dream, Damien refuses.

Frank Keenan's work as the Emir is something ghastly in its conviction; it is really a monumental piece of acting. Enid Markey, as the daughter, handles herself well. Others, all of which are well cast, are Charles K. French, Roy Laidlaw, Fanny Midgley and J. Frank Burke.

"Don Quixote" frankly is not the work of D. W. Griffith, but was produced by Edward Dillon. Chester Withey, who also plays the part of Don Fernando, has provided a scenario which follows the lines of Cervantes very faithfully. In fact, he has injected no new material, and has interpreted the old Spaniard literally.

The principal incidents used are the Don's absorption of knight-errant literature, the affair of the windmills, the championship of Dorothea, the night at the inn, the rescue of the convicts, and the bringing together of Cardenio and his Lucinda, with the subsequent confounding of Don Fernando and the death of Quixote.

No better vehicle for the presentation of De Wolf Hopper in pictures could have been selected. He is the ideal type, and his work is delicious. He has an admirable conception of the part, and he stays within it every second. As Dulcinea, Fay Tincher is a quaint and sympathetic figure.

It is the best work she has yet done. Technically, the picture approaches perfection. The locations have been the subject of considerable thought, and the atmosphere of quaint satire has been preserved with admirable artistry. Max Davidson, Rhea Mitchell, Julia Fay, George Walsh, Edward Dillon, Carl Stockdale and William Brown complete the cast.

"THE MAKING OF CROOKS"

(Selig—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY 2nd

THE lesson this picture attempts to teach is that pool rooms are hotbeds of vice and crime, and surely if the conditions depicted are prevalent, it behooves every parent to keep idle offspring out of these places. Perhaps if the evil presented was more widespread, and the people affected by it were more numerous, the picture would have a more universal appeal.

Jack Pickford makes his first appearance as a Selig star, but the opportunities given him for real acting are so limited that no very definite opinion of his histrionic talent can be made. He handles everything he is given to do very well. The support is fair.

Walton, an ex-jailbird, with the police protection of O'Neil, a political boss, opens a chain of pool rooms, with Tony, a young Italian, as the pool sharp. Tony lures many victims into the establishments, and the losers are influenced by hangers-on to recoup their losses by robbery.

A young bank messenger is caught trying to steal the bank's money, and he confesses that he learned to gamble in Walton's places. When other crimes are attributed to these dens, the mayor orders them to be raided, and many youths are imprisoned.

Tony steals a car for a midnight joy-ride with Hazel O'Neil, the daughter of the boss. The engine is stalled on a railroad crossing, and the girl is killed. Tony is also placed behind the bars.

PRODUCTIONS FROM ALL PROGRAMS

GENERAL FILM PROGRAM

"Heredity." (Biograph. Mon., Dec. 27.)—Another Griffith re-issue, and an unusually strong subject. A renegade white man meets an Indian girl, and she becomes his purchased wife. A son is born, who partakes more and more of the Indian characteristics as he grows to manhood.

The father, enraged at the youth's inclination toward Indian life and manners, uses violence to get the boy to accompany him on a trading trip. The father sells bad whiskey to other Indian tribes, and then sells them broken guns. Aroused by the whiskey and his trickery, the Indians go on the warpath.

They attack the trader's wagons; the war-cry of his ancestors reaches the blood of the half-breed youth, and he turns on his white father. The renegade pays the penalty of his crimes, and the half-breed returns to his mother and people. Harry Carey, Madge Kirby, Jack Pickford, Alfred Paget and W. C. Robinson are in the cast.

"The Woman of Mystery." (Biograph. Three reels. Wed., Dec. 29.)—International intrigue and the ever-popular foreign spy have been used to make a stirring three-reel melodrama. A powerful explosive, the invention of General Tremont, is sought by the spy band, and one of them gains entrance to the laboratory, kills the general, and opens the safe.

The safe has been adjusted so as to explode if opened by one who does not know the secret method; and, in opening it, Hans the spy loses his left hand. In tracing the band through a ring found on the severed hand, the detectives learn that a mysterious woman visited the laboratory on the night of the murder.

Later this woman is revealed as Baroness Sophia, one of the band of spies. She meets Marcel, son of the late general's wealthy friend, and he falls in love with her. Through him she gets into the laboratory and steals the formula, but, in the meantime, she has fallen in love with Marcel, and refuses to turn the paper over to the conspirators. She warns Marcel not to come to a villa, where he is being lured in her name, but he comes in spite of her, and she and he are both attacked by the other conspirators.

She proves her love for him by returning the formula, then she succumbs to her injuries. Marcel is rescued by his father and friends. The cast includes G. Raymond Nye, Jack Drumeir, Franklin Ritchie, Herbert Barrington, Charles H. Mailes and Louise Vale.

"Brought Home." (Essanay. Two reels. Tues., Dec. 28.)—Not shown for review; the story follows. Dorcas Dale, a little orphan girl, leaves the orphanage to go to the city home of Louise Edgeworth, where she is to work. Miss Edgeworth fails to meet the train, and Dorcas, while wandering about the streets, is run over by an automobile.

The driver is Jack Marston, a young millionaire, who that day had been declared by specialists to be insane, and who was attempting suicide. The accident clears his mind, and Dorcas is taken to his home, where she is nursed back to health.

While there, Billy Tyne, another little orphan, visits her, and Marston takes a fancy to him. Marston sends Dorcas away to a convent, and then takes Billy out West, where they live on a ranch. Years later Dorcas, now a grown woman, goes West to find Marston, who is overjoyed to see the little waif who has made life worth while for him.

"The Fable of the Heir and the Heiress." (Essanay. Wed., Dec. 29.)—This is one of the best fables that has come from the facile pen of George Ade. The acting is rather better than that of the last few Fable releases. Charles J. Stine, Earl Stanhope and Peggy Sweeney are in the cast.

Once upon a time there was a Work-horse who lay awake nights scheming to collect more Kale. He did not squander the coin on Cut Flowers or such, but he wanted his Offspring to go through life on Ball Bearings. When Pa locked his desk and started for the Pearly Gates, he told his clerk to keep the family Well Fixed.

This the Slave did, but he Corraled the Simoleons for his own family. The Man Friday Kicked Off and left the Wad to his Hopefuls.

The Work-horse's son is now an Obliging Night Clerk, and daughter works in a nickel Show. Moral: Somebody must Rake up the leaves before the Young People can have a Successful Bon-fire.

"The Prisoner at the Bar." (Essanay. Three reels. Sat., Jan. 1.)—Not shown for review; the story follows. Ambrose Stanton, a millionaire, is found murdered in his home. In the midst of the inquest a fisherman enters the house and confesses that he did the killing.

At his trial he is defended by a young lawyer named Allen. The prisoner tells the story of his life. He and Stanton had worked together in a small town bank, and were rivals for the hand of Shirley Harwood. Allen won her, and to obtain revenge Stanton stole the bank's funds, shifting the blame to Allen.

When the innocent man was sent to prison, Stanton stole his wife and boy. Years later Allen was pardoned, and he became a fisherman. By chance he rescues a woman from drowning, who proves to be his wife.

After hearing her story he went to Stanton's home and killed him. Allen is acquitted by the jury, and the young lawyer turns out to be his lost son. There is a happy reunion in the courtroom.

"The Caretaker's Dilemma." (Kalem. Tues., Dec. 28.)—As a burlesque comedy, this subject has points of action and situation which lift it somewhat above the usual run. Bud Duncan and Jack McDermott, his pal, obtain positions as caretakers of the wealthy Way home during the absence of the family.

Jack soon finds a dress suit and Bud a butler's coat, and with these clothes they hold high carnival in the house, until Jean, the pretty cousin of the family arrives for a visit. She mistakes Jack for Cousin Roland, and he allows the deception to go on. The real Roland and his wife return just as the party is getting back from an auto ride. Bud and Jack have just time to crank up the auto and make a getaway. Ethel Teare, William Clarke and Lillian Savage are also in the cast.

"The Taking of Stingaree." (Kalem. Two reels. Wed., Dec. 29.)—The element of comedy is strong in this episode of the Stingaree series. There is rivalry between inspectors Cairns and Kilbride over the taking of Stingaree.

In the meantime a trooper falls into the bushranger's hands. The latter ties him up and exchanges clothing with him. In the trooper's uniform he meets and hoodwinks Inspector Kilbride, and does not reveal his identity until the inspector is tied fast to a tree. While Stingaree is taunting the inspector, Cairns arrives and covers Stingaree with his pistol.

The bushranger, however, takes advantage of an altercation between the two inspectors as to who made the capture, and gets the drop on both. Cairns is also tied up, and while the two berate each other from separate trees, Stingaree rides to the settlement and watches through the window while Ethel sings at a concert. True Boardman, Marian Sais, Paul C. Hurst, Frank Jonasson, Ollie Kirkby and Edward Clisbee are in the cast.

"The Spy's Ruse." (Kalem. Fri., Dec. 31.)—Marguerite, in this venture, has to do with foreign spies and political intrigue. Bob, Marguerite's sweetheart, has invented an electric torpedo deflector, but owing to mysterious "hitches" in his workshop, the demonstration to naval officers has to be postponed twice.

Finally a successful demonstration is made, and immediately afterward Bob's assistant attacks him in his office and steals the plans. He refuses to turn them over to the spies who have hired him to get them, and they pursue him. He flees across the golf course and takes refuge in Marguerite's auto.

Not knowing who he is, she takes him to her home, and there Bob, who has escaped from his shop confronts him. He escapes through a window and the spies, waiting outside, shoot him.

Marguerite and Bob run out and hold the spies at bay with pistols until the police arrive. Marguerite Courtot, Richard Purdon, Bradley Parker, R. A. Bennett, Joseph Sullivan and Harry Edwards compose the cast.

"Otto's Cabaret." (Lubin. Wed., Dec. 22.—The humor in this comedy number, featuring David Don, is very scarce and will be adjudged so, even by ardent admirers of Don. While the plot itself has a certain comical theme, the situations presented are not funny enough nor plentiful enough to make "Otto's Cabaret" really laughable.

"Heartaches." (Lubin. Four reels. Wed., Dec. 22.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"Beyond All Is Love." (Lubin. Three reels. Thurs., Dec. 23.)—This number shows how the inherited drug habit got the better of a young man and how his financee saved him after he had tasted the dregs of life.

The story, by Daniel Carson Goodman, is well treated save as to space, for the picture is drawn out and could be condensed, and would show to better advantage as a two-reel subject.

Francis Joyner as Hardy gives a realistic performance, while Helen Greene wears a lot of pretty clothes and appears to good advantage as his fiancee. The direction by Clay M. Greene is not up to the mark of his best subjects.

"The Making of Crooks." (Selig. Three reels. Mon., Dec. 27.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"The Manicure Girl." (Selig. Sat., Jan. 1.)—Not shown for review; the story follows. Briggs, Bloom Center's barber, engages a manicure to stimulate business. The girl is greeted by the local band when she arrives in town. Business flourishes, until the girl's husband comes to town and demands money.

Hearing his threats, Chubby Green and some of his intimates decide to run him out of town. They make the parasite run the gauntlet until he finally escapes, leaving the Bloom Center defenders fighting among themselves.

KLEINE-EDISON SERVICE

"The Matchmakers." (Edison-Kleine. Three reels. Fri., Dec. 31.)—This is an interesting story, with small pretension to offering thrills, but with a straight tale to tell and a moral to impress. The Van Loons are broke, and in order to maintain their position in New York, look about for a wealthy match for their son, Bertie.

In the meantime, Mamie Lane, a distant country relative of the Van Loons, has fallen in love with Hugh, a countryman, and Hugh has struck gold and is very rich. As half the gold goes to Mamie's father, who grub-staked Hugh, the Van Loons invite him and his daughter to visit them, and then begins an attempt to marry Bertie to Mamie.

But Mamie loves Hugh, and Bertie loves a poor girl, Alice. Father Lane soon learns of the situation, and sending for Hugh, he quietly arranges a double marriage, in which Hugh, Mamie, Bertie and Alice figure. Then Hugh and Mamie are shipped home, and Bertie is given a good job in Hugh's mine. The objections of the elder Van Loon are silenced with a 44-calibre pistol in the hands of Papa Lane.

Sally Crute, William Wadsworth, Carlton King, Paul Bliss, Margaret Prussing, Leonora von Ottinger, Robert Brower and Mrs. Wallace Erskine are in the cast. The piece was written by William Addison Lathrop, and directed by George Ridgwell.

MUTUAL PROGRAM

"The Winning of Jess." (Centaur. Two reels. Thurs., Dec. 23.)—The Bostock animals, or part of them, are used in this story of the mountains. Deserted by his wife, Charles Robbins leaves his daughter at the door of the Crosbys and becomes a hermit.

She grows up to be Jess Crosby, the favorite of the mountainside, and beloved especially by Tom, the foreman of the ranch. Tom saves her life twice, but when the owner of the ranch comes on from the city, with his son, John, she falls in love with the city man.

Tom is out in the cold, until Jess, out walking with John, is chased by two pumas, and takes refuge in the hermit's cabin. Tom and the hermit, who are hunting, find and rescue her, and then it develops that the ranch-owner is the hermit's brother, and John is Jess' cousin.

Tom's bravery brings to Jess to realization that he is the one she has loved all the time, and she returns to him. Capt. Jack Bonavita, Charles Gay, Margaret Gibson, Jane Keckley, Roy Watson, Thomas F. Morrissey, John Oaker and Maxine Schneider compose the cast.

"Hearts and Clubs." (Cub. Fri., Dec. 24.)—Jerry (George Ovey) figures as an active matchmaker for his friend Jerry and Madge. Madge's father opposes the match, and with Hayden, the man of his choice, plans to pounce upon the successful suitor, whom he thinks is Jerry "little and easily licked."

Jerry learns of the plan, tells Shorty, who dresses in Jerry's clothes, and kneeling to preserve the illusion as regards height, waits until father and Hayden appear, when he rises to his full six feet two and knocks their heads together.

Later Shorty and Madge plan to wed; Jerry dresses as the girl, and fools father, who pursues him, while the two sweethearts are quietly united.

"Cissy's Christmas Turkey." (Casino. Sun., Dec. 26.)—Rennold Wolf has furnished a scenario out of which a very ludicrous burlesque has been made by Director Edwin Middleton. Two noble guests of the Hotel de Gink are invited to lunch at the Ritz with Gladys Gladiola.

They accept with alacrity, and everything is rosy, until one of Glady's plumes catches fire from the candelabra, and she insists that it be replaced. The two cavaliers go hunting for a new one; they ransack her-roosts and poultry shows, only to have their efforts spurned by Gladys.

Then they go out in earnest to find the golden pheasant. They run afoul of the game warden, and in the meantime Gladys makes the acquaintance of Reggie Astorbilt, who buys her a new plume.

When the two cavaliers are marched off to jail they get only a peal of laughter from Gladys. Budd Ross, Edward Boulden, Jenny Nelson and Phin Nares are in the cast.

"Una's Useful Uncle." (Falstaff. Mon., Dec. 27.)—A young married couple are troubled between the necessity of making a living and the visits of hordes of relatives. The final straw is Uncle Dan, who announces his arrival for an indefinite stay, much to the young farmer's horror.

Uncle Dan, however, proves his usefulness when the young couple becomes involved with a money lender, who is cheating them. Then he introduces in the village the "Usquebaugh Apple," a fruit which makes everybody so happy that it sells like hot cakes.

After Uncle Dan has made a small fortune from the sales, he sells the formula to the moneylender for a fabulous price, and he and the young couple disappear. The formula merely directs that a little whiskey be put into each apple. Charles Emerson, Winifred Lane and Riley Chamberlain head the cast.

"The Tragic Circle." (American. Two reels. Mon., Dec. 27.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"Kiddus, Kids, and Kiddo." (Beauty. Tues., Dec. 28.)—Clifford Callis, a small boy, carries off the acting honors in this comedy. The remainder of the cast, consisting of John Sheehan, Carol Holloway and John Steppling, acquit themselves as well as the limited possibilities of the plot permit.

Mr. and Mrs. Kidd fear that their precocious enfant terrible has been kidnapped, and enlist the aid of Kiddus, an obtuse young man, to find him. Kiddo, the boy, has hid himself in the flivver belonging to Kiddus, and rides around with the searcher.

Kiddus picks up several children in his machine, thinking that they may be Kiddo, and the enraged parents join in an old-fashioned chase. They pursue the kidnapper to his house, where Kiddo is found busy demolishing the furniture.

"The Cactus Blossom." (Mustang. Two reels. Fri., Dec. 31.)—This typical Western subject is well directed and ably played by Anna Little, Frank Borzage, Dick La Reno, and Chief Big Tree. The last mentioned actor appears to be a real Indian, and he is a good character man as well.

Dave Foster and his daughter Beulah live alone on a mining claim they have staked. One day they befriend an Indian, and the redskin becomes their staunch friend. When their claim pinches out, the Indian tells them of a rich vein he has discovered. Some nearby desperadoes hear of this lode, and they decide to rob the Fosters of it.

Reed Avery, a cowpuncher, overhears this plot, and, although Beulah had previously rejected him, decides to help fight off the thieves. The desperadoes are finally beaten off, but not before Avery has been fatally wounded. He has won the love of the girl by his heroism, but his smiling face is transfixed in a mask of death.

"The Mender." (American. Fri., Dec. 31.)—This picture is pretty sure to have the feminine portion of your audience half-way between a tear and a smile, for it has many "heart throbs." The acting is commendable.

The Mender is an itinerant tinker, whose greatest joy is to bring happiness to others.

One day he sees Baby Bess, a poor, little, rich girl, crying piteously. He finds out that the little girl's parents are about to be divorced. To prevent this injustice to the tot, he kidnaps her, and the parents, in their agony of fear concerning the child's safety, are drawn together.

When the tinker sees that his object has been accomplished, he returns Baby Bess.

In the cast are William Carroll, E. Forrest Tayor, Helene Rosson and Rosemary McMackin.

"The Wraith of Haddon Towers." (Clipper. Three reels. Sat., Jan. 1.)—This picture puts a strong tax on the credulity, for it deals with a psychic phenomenon quite remote from human experience. The sympathetic treatment accorded this strange subject by Constance Crawley and Arthur Maude does much to soften its unreality, however.

Beatrice Van, in the role of an unfaithful wife, is particularly good. The photography, especially the double exposure work, is fine.

Disgusted by his wife's coldness, Philip Drummond spends much of his time in studying psychic phenomena, and finally comes to believe in reincarnation. His aged uncle, Baron Drummond, dies, and Philip inherits the title and the baronial estate, Haddon Towers.

One day he enters a locked room, and there he sees a disembodied wraith. This ghostly figure informs him that generations ago they were lovers, but that a jealous rival had killed him. He looks back into the dim vista of the years and remembers everything. His wife enters the room some time afterward and finds him dead. His spirit had gone to join that of his soul-mate.

"Settled Out of Court." (Beauty. Sat., Jan. 1.)—A pleasant little drama, whose only heart-interest is filial and parental. The principals, Frank Borzage, William Carroll and Lucille Ward, give excellent interpretations of their roles.

Old Darby and Joan, after sixty years of married life, decide that they "jess can't get along," and they ask a lawyer to draw up divorce papers. The lawyer is perplexed to know what to do, but the advent of a young man, who asks where Darby and Joan are living, settles the problem.

The man is the son of the aged couple, who had run away from home many years before, had become wealthy, and is now searching for his parents. When he finds that his mother and father are contemplating a divorce, he goes to them and reminds them of their son, and asks for the sake of their child that they remain together. When they decide to do this, the son makes known his identity.

PATHE EXCHANGE INC.

"Pathé News," No. 99. (Pathé.)—Roger W. Babson establishes out-door office for stenographers at Boston; "Death Avenue" in New York; children of Oquossoc, Me., dance around Christmas tree which they will send to the White House; Crow Indian chiefs visit Washington to protest against the opening of the reservation to settlement; scenes at $200,000 oil fire at Hoboken; porpoise fishing off Cape Hatteras; New York dog catchers busy collecting canines to prevent spread of hydrophobia; new 16-inch gun reaches proving grounds at Sandy Hook; Oscar Straus, new Public Service Commissioner of New York.

"New Adventures of Wallingford." (Pathé. Two reels.)—"Buying a Bank With Bunk," is the title of this episode, in which J. Rufus and Blackie take advantage of Banker Quirker's "past" as well as his present predilection for women, to get back part of the fortune he has helped steal from Violet and Fanny.

They find he is carrying on an affair with a young woman, and through an anonymous letter to Mrs. Quirker, get him so worried that in his haste to get away he sells out his bank stock for $51,000, paid in a worthless check.

Then Wallingford borrows that sum from the bank directors, giving his stock as collateral. While Quirker is arguing with the teller of the New York bank over the worthless check, Mrs. Quirker arrives and cuts short the argument. Burr McIntosh, Max Figman and Lolita Robertson is featured in the cast.

"The Red Circle," No. 2. (Balboa. Two reels.)—In the second of the new Pathé serial, a loan broker's office is invaded by June Travis, the young society girl interested in relief work. The loan shark is locked in his vault, and a bunch of notes given by his victims is stolen. The girl escapes in the same automobile in which Lamar, the detective saw a woman with the red circle criminal brand on her hand. The automobile is followed, but before it is overtaken, the veiled woman in it has stepped out, turned her coat inside out, and appears in white. She is not recognized.

The next day the victims of the loan shark receive notification that their notes have been destroyed and their debts cancelled. June's old nurse, Mary, notices the red circle on the girl's hand the next morning, and warns her of a terrible danger ahead. Ruth Roland and Frank Mayo head the cast.

"The Bill Board Dodgers." (Starlight.)—Heinie and Louie resort to disguise for fear they may have struck the same town before and forgotten it, and then engage rooms, to be paid for later. When they find themselves unable to pay, they attempt to escape by the old trunk method, but are caught by the landlady, who sends them down to the kitchen to work it out.

There they do irreparable damage, and their exploits are so distasteful to the star boarder, a tragedian that the police are summoned. Heinie and Louie land in a cell, but are not crestfallen, as they find plenty to eat provided.

"The Life of Our Saviour." (Pathé Gold Rooster. Seven reels.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

"Graft." (Universal Special Feature. Two reels. Third Chapter. Week of Dec. 27.)—Bruce Larnigan here turns his relentless activities toward Penrose, head of the Traction Trust. Penrose, however, is expectant and with the aid of Stone plans to kill Bruce when he enters the new subway disguised as a workman to inspect conditions.

There is an explosion but Bruce, warned by his fiance, escapes and instead Penrose, who is in his car on the street above, comes crashing through the aperture left by the blast.

These Subway scenes are excellently laid, being realistic to the extreme, while some actual views of the subway disaster in New York City are blended in, in a most even way. This number was suggested by George Brownson Howard and almost passes the two preceding numbers in respect to melodramatic thrills and excitement.

"The Nature Man or a Struggle for Existence." (Broadway Universal Feature. Five reels. Mon., Dec. 27.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"Some Chaperone." (Nestor. Mon., Dec. 27.)—Lee Moran, in one of his funniest characterizations, as the female chaperone. The plot is good, but the cast, under Christie's direction, really puts the comedy over. Betty Compson, who grows more fascinating with each succeeding picture. Eddie Lyons, Ethel Lynn and Harry Rattenberry are in the other principal parts.

"As the Shadows Fall." Gold Seal. Two reels. Tues., Dec. 28.)—A society drama with a big thrill in its final scenes, when the heroine leaps from a hotel window. The offering is on the whole, fair. It deals with a familiar theme and deals with it in a style which, though not always convincing, has interest a-plenty.

Herbert Rawlinson, Agnes Vernon, Jack Wells and Dorothy Beeb appeared under William Worthington's direction. Walter Woods wrote the scenario from a story by Harvey Gates.

"The Evil of Suspicion." (Laemmle. Tues., Dec. 28.—A conventional number that has little suspense, written and produced by Rupert Julian. The scenes, which are all very well chosen, and the photography, are the picture's strong points. Elsie Jane Wilson and Hal Cooley are others in the cast besides Julian.

"Father's Child." (Victor. Three reels. Wed., Dec. 29.)—A comedy written, designed and directed by Harry Myers, of excellent quality in respect to the second of these items, as the settings and subtitles show delightful taste.

In other ways, however, "Father's Child" fails to measure up to required standards of three-reel comedies. The action is drawn out and the story is full of tiresome play that takes the form of aggravating padding. It merely shows the eruptions caused by a baby on a very hot day.

EVERY THURSDAY ON THE GENERAL FILM PROGRAM. BOOK THEM

James Rosen is the baby, and Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby the parents. There are times when the action is punctuated by laughs, but the spaces between are lengthy.

"A Scandal at Sea." (L-Ko. Wed., Dec. 29.) —One of those customary scandals in which the main point is discovering the flirt in the wife's room, with the action laid on shipboard. Louise Orth is one of the leads, while the others are very good in registering what humor their parts possess.

"The Little Upstart." (Laemmle. Three reels. Thurs., Dec. 30.)—This romantic drama, featuring Stella Razetto, was reviewed at length in the issue of November 6, page 90. It was listed as a Gold Seal, but since has been transferred to the Laemmle brand.

"Babbling Tongues." (Big U. Thurs., Dec. 30.) —One of Murdock MacQuarrie's character studies laid in a plot of a very sympathetic sort. Arthur Moon, Edna Payne and Lydia Yeamans Titus are in the supporting cast.

"A Tribute to Mother." (Imp. Two reels. Fri., Dec. 31.)—Raymond Schrock produced this number from a scenario by James W. Elliot. Its central idea, glorifying "mother," is most sympathetic and enjoyable after the story has settled down, but to do this it passes through a lengthy series of scenes that are confusing.

In fact the entire production could have been handled to better advantage, although its main theme leaves a satisfactory impression. Morgan Thorpe gives a good performance in one of the major parts.

"Flivver's Terrible Past." (Nestor. Fri., Dec. 31.)—An English product containing a clever lead, who cavorts about in a rather simple story that amuses at times because of its exaggerated burlesque qualities. Charles Evans is the comedian.

"The Dawn Road." (Bison. Two reels. Sat., Jan. 1.)—A Western melodrama, written by Ben Cohn, and produced by Joe Franz, typical in every gratifying respect of that director's exciting Westerns. The action is always rapid and is built along the lines of the old school melodrama which is still greatly in favor.

The feature thrill is the rescue of the girl from a runaway stage coach by the hero. Sherman Bainbridge, Edna Payne, Florine Hanna, Norbert Myles and Herman Ilmer do good and appropriate work in the principal parts.

"Uncle Sam at Work." No. 2. (Powers. Sat., Jan. 1.)—Reviewed at length in the issue of Dec. 18, together with the first instalment.

"Lemonade Aids Cupid." (Joker. Sat., Jan. 1.) —One of Allen Curtis' rube town farces, written by Gale Henry. Stick in the lemonade is the most illuminating feature of the reel, resulting in much typical Joker comedy. Max Asher, William Franey, Milburn Moranti, Lillian Peacock and Gale Henry appear at their best.

"The Honor to Die." (Big U. Three reels. Sun., Jan. 2.)—This film, made in Italy under the personal supervision of Mr. Ambrosio, deals with the war between the Austrians and Italians which took place in the latter part of the seventeenth century. It contains a number of realistic battle scenes and a good strong story. Rita Jolivet, the American actress, appears to excellent advantage in the leading feminine role and is supported by a capable and understanding cast.

The story shows how a captain in the Italian army was so entranced by a beautiful woman, living near the camp, that he neglected to discover who she was. It develops that she is a spy for the opposition, and the captain is accused by his superior officer of being faithless to his cause. To prove his loyalty to his country the wronged man volunteers to lead a perilous charge of cavalry against the enemy, and so in doing his duty he proves with his death that Italy stood first in his heart.

The photography of the picture deserves especial commendation, while the light effects, particularly in the night scenes, are very beautiful. The ancient costumes add an attractive touch of color. On the whole it is certainly to be enjoyed, as its love story is strong and the entire picture is intelligently presented.

"Pants and Petticoats." (L-Ko. Sun., Jan. 2.) —A very good comedy, void of the slapstick, and containing an interesting plot and capable and humorous interpretation. Reggie Morris dons feminine garb once more and is ably supported by Gertrude Selby and Fatty Voss, who is in this picture an excellent comedian.

MATTY ROUBERT in

"THE WAIF"

NOT A KID PICTURE— But A

Compelling human interest drama built around the fortunes of a typical New York urchin, with a native ability all his own, is here depicted with a vividness that thrills and captivates. Brimful of tears and laughter with a continuous tugging at the heart-strings.

5 Parts

"Brimful of heart interest —will hold any audience. —Clean, wholesome and of fine moral tone."—Moving Picture World.

"The picture draws forth tears and smiles alternately and is of real appeal."—Motion Picture News.

"This picture should prove a great favorite. 'The Waif' is a film that will sell."—Motion Picture Mail.

"Excellent in all respects. It is well staged and Master Roubert acts with a conviction and sureness that will hold an audience from beginning to end." — The Morning Telegraph.

Triangle Productions

For Week of December 26th

The continuation of TRIANGLE Quality week after week, the upholding of TRIANGLE ideas month after month, and the consistent production of motion picture plays so far above the average that comparison is impossible is now assured. A word about the plays to be released for the week of December 26th may still further emphasize this point.

First there is "The Edge of the Abyss" which gives Mary Boland, the popular Broadway actress, her first opportunity on the screen. An especially strong play of modern appeal, a gripping story of intense interest combine into a particularly entertaining drama. Every woman will want to see this play of a vital domestic problem—and see it again.

Then "The Penitents," with Orrin Johnson in the title role, is another play of a distinctly new type based on the fanaticism of a queer religious sect who flourished in Mexico in the seventeenth century. Marvelous scenic effects, wonderful acting and a tense story combine to give this play the strongest pull.

And as for the Keystones, the first, "A Submarine Pirate," featuring Syd Chaplin of the famous Chaplin family, is a four reeler which the New York press declared to be the very best Keystone ever produced. The Navy Department permitted the use of a U. S. Government Submarine, and after witnessing the picture decided to use it for recruiting purposes. "The Hunt" with Ford Sterling, the other Keystone, furnishes more than its share of laughter with its swift moving merrimaking, and completes a week of exceptional excellence.

"The Submarine Pirate"
will Increase Box Office Returns

Increased box office returns are assured with such a feature as "A Submarine Pirate" on any house program. In addition to the well-known Keystone Quality, here we have a roaring, tearing four-reeler that will simply drag an audience into the theatre.

"The Submarine Pirate" is so good that the U. S. Navy Department wants a copy of it. It is so good that you can thank your lucky stars that it is yours for these days. The New York press is a unit in its praise:

"Shudders and laughs close together run into one long tremor—that's the effect of seeing 'A Submarine Pirate.' Its melodrama is so funny that one can't merely thrill, and its comedy is so exciting that one can't merely laugh."—N. Y. Sun.

"The new Triangle-Keystone Comedy, 'A Submarine Pirate,' is one of the most amusing films of the season. It is thrilling as well for it sets a new limit in stunts."—N. Y. Tribune.

"'A Submarine Pirate' is one of the best comedies Mack Sennett has ever produced."—Philadelphia Ledger.

"A sensational film, 'A Submarine Pirate,' is the chief attraction at the Knickerbocker Theatre this week."—N. Y. Evening Post.

These are the kind of comments this wonderful picture has secured. Many others of equally glowing praise have appeared in the other New York, Philadelphia and Chicago papers. When "A Submarine Pirate" was shown at the Knickerbocker Theatre during the week of December 12th for the second time the criticisms were as pleasing as at first.

My dear Mr. Partridge:

While you did not request us to comment on the feature, "A Nations's Peril," which we showed Sunday at our Majestic Theatre, we wish to state that we are really compelled to say a word or two in appreciation of the tremendous outburst of applause, and the approval of this great production by the public. As far as Box Office success, it was the biggest in the history of the house.

We are using the best features the market produces, and consider your, "A Nation's Peril"--"THE ONE BEST BET." Give us a few more like them.

With best wishes,
we remain

From the Same Materials—

Some men build mammoth plants—others, pigmy workshops.

The essentials of a successful film feature are common knowledge—

Yet the number of such features which are released is woefully small.

That this company's productions have become a guarantee of sterling merit, is due not alone to that which is put into them, but also to how that material is applied.

Back of each there are painstaking efforts, unequaled experience and resources, and a sincerity of purpose which make for a finished product of the highest order.

And with each there goes a selling service designed to promote that feature to the best advantage of its exhibitors.

All of which, when summed up, simply means that those who book V-L-S-E features may bank their profits in advance.

Motion Picture Projection Simplified

By J. H. Hallberg

41—Do you mean to have it understood that with an alternating current system supplying translating devices such as an electric arc, for instance, there is absolutely no power at the load or at the arc at regular intervals?

Ans.—Yes! Most assuredly. You have learned how with the A. C. system the generator sends out an impulse of current flowing in one direction through the system; then within the fraction of a second, depending upon the number of cycles the generator operates at, there is another impulse flowing through the system and the load in the opposite direction.

You have been told and understand that it is impossible to have any object or force moving or exerting influence in one direction without having the object or force coming to a standstill before it can be moved or exert force in the opposite direction. In other words, there is a period of rest during which no effort or power is produced with each reversal of current.

42—Is it a fact in view of the foregoing answer, that with A. C. the illumination from an arc maintained between two carbons or other electrodes, introduces objectionable flicker?

Ans.—With all electric arcs maintained between two electrodes where the current supply is alternating there is a flicker, the degree of which depends upon the frequency or the number of cycles on the system.

In the early days the designers of generators developed a system producing about 125 cycles. As a matter of fact the number of cycles maintained on the early systems varied between 120 and 140 cycles.

With a frequency as high as 140 or, in fact, between 120 and 140, the interruptions at the arc are so rapid that the eye cannot perceive the change or the dead period.

Later on, the 60 cycle system was developed, and with 60 cycles the arc is still satisfactory for general lighting, because the eye cannot even then perceive the interruptions which would give the impression of a flicker.

It is really not possible to observe the interruptions of an A. C. arc with the naked eye before the frequency drops to 40 cycles. This frequency is about the critical point, because at anything below 40 cycles, the flicker in an ordinary arc appears.

There are, however, commercial systems operating at 33 1/3 cycles, and at 25 cycles, but these are not intended as a general rule for electric lighting, being mostly installed for power transmission purposes.

43—Why is it that an incandescent lamp does not flicker on the lower cycle A. C. systems, at least, why cannot the eye perceive the flicker?

Ans.—With the incandescent lamp the source of light is produced by a glowing body made into the shape of a string like filament Fig. 30. When the filament once becomes heated, due to one A. C. impulse, it is brought up to a very high temperature which makes it incandescent.

You know and understand that if you bring a metallic wire up to such a high temperature that it becomes incandescent or glows it will maintain its glow for quite some time after the heating medium is removed from the wire. If you take an iron poker and put it in the fire it becomes incandescent.

Remove it from the fire and it will still glow. You also know that the larger the object which has been heated, the longer it will maintain its heat and consequently the longer it will remain glowing after discontinuing the source of heat.

In a similar manner when the wire filament within an incandescent lamp has become heated, so that it glows it will maintain the glow or its incandescence until the A. C. has forced an impulse of power in the opposite direction to reheat the filament which is therefore again brought up to the high degree of incandescence it had on the original impulse.

Continual impulses of A. C., first in one direction and then in the opposite will, therefore, maintain what to the eye appears to be an absolutely constant glow. I dare say, that if proper instruments are applied to measure or project the glow upon a screen it will be found that there is a dip or a variation or what you might call a flicker, even in the incandescent lamp when operating at 40 to 60 cycles.

When operating on 25 cycle systems the flicker from an incandescent lamp due to the comparatively slow reversals of the current is perceptible to the naked eye, because the frequency of heating the filament on 25 cycles is so low that during the instant of reversal, representing the period of no power expended to heat the filament, sufficient time elapses to let the wire cool off, thereby losing illuminating power which the eye can easily percept and observe as flicker.

Strand, Montgomery, Ala., Up-To-Date Southern Theatre

Blue and Buff Color Scheme, Carried Out in Lobby and Auditorium, Makes For Attractive Appearance—House Itself Cost About $50,000, Runs Features Exclusively, Music Being Furnished by an Organ and Eight Piece Orchestra

FOYER, EXTERIOR AND INTERIOR OF THE STRAND THEATRE, MONTGOMERY, ALA., A MODERN MOTION PICTURE THEATRE

THE Strand theatre, the latest addition to the amusement field of Montgomery, Ala., is owned by the Strand Amusement Company, of which R. B. Wilby is the manager.

The cost of the Strand, without the land upon which it is built, closely approaches $50,000. It was constructed with the idea of giving Montgomery one of the finest theatres in the South.

The lobby of the Strand is entirely of tile, the same color scheme being used for it as for the interior. The floor of the auditorium is covered with cork tile, which also carried out the blue and buff color scheme, while the walls are in the same colors with a bit of gold added. The wainscoting of the interior is all of blue tile with the vents for the ventilating system in buff.

A Tuesday Morning Scene in the Heart of the New York Film District: Schnier's News-stand, with its Eye-Catching Display of Motion Picture News, at Forty-fifth Street and Broadway

The Strand is furnished fresh air by a sixty-inch blower which gets its supply from a stack leading ten feet above the roof of the building. It is distributed through sheet iron ducts throughout the building. The exhaust system consists of two forty-two-inch fans connected by ducts to openings in the ceiling of the auditorium and by an additional fan which takes air through openings in the wall behind the pipe organ, shown in the accompanying photograph.

Particular emphasis is given to the musical accompaniment to the pictures by the Strand. In addition to a pipe organ an eight-piece orchestra is used. Heavy overtures played by the two in conjunction have become one of the most-talked-of features of the new theatre.

The service of the Strand is made up entirely of features which are supplied through the distributing offices of World, Pathé, Kleine, V-L-S-E, Mutual, and Metro. The house has secured the Triangle franchise for Montgomery, and some of the features now being shown in this theatre will be moved to one of the smaller houses controlled by the Strand Amusement Company.

The mechanical equipment of the Strand consists of a motor-generator, two projection machines, and a day and night screen. Three men are employed in the operating room.

GUNBY BROTHERS DENY SALE OF STUDIOS AND LABORATORIES

GUNBY BROS., INC., wish to correct an impression circulated throughout the trade that they have sold their studio and laboratories at Ridgefield Park, N. J., which is an error as this property is not for sale.

The Charter Features Corporation has leased the Gunby studio for a term of years in which they will continue making pictures of Abraham Lincoln, portrayed by Benjamin Chapin, and which they have been working on for quite some time. This company has no connection with the Gunby laboratories situated in the same building, and any other concern who claims to have rented, leased or bought this studio, or laboratories, is handling the truth in a very careless manner.

ELIMINATION OF RAINBOWS

R. A. F., Round Mountain, Nev.:—Would like to ask you a few questions in regard to my light. I have a Pathé Freres machine marked 5,227. For the first reel and sometimes the second reel I have a fine white light.

After that I get a rainbow on screen and the lower part of picture becomes blurred.

Try as I can I can't get the rainbow out and bring my picture back to the right focus. Front lens is marked 5 inches E. F. and I throw the picture fifty feet. Any information on this subject will be highly appreciated.

ANSWER.—Your question has had my careful consideration but unfortunately the information given is not sufficient upon which to base a complete reply.

The fact that you have proper illumination during the first and sometimes during the second reel indicates that under normal conditions, everything operates satisfactorily.

You know that the only change within the lamp-house as you continue to operate the arc is that the carbons are constantly being consumed. This, of course, changes the position of the upper and lower carbon holders relative to each other, and if your carbons are not trimmed in perfect alignment it will, of course, also change the relative back and forward position of the carbons, and at the same time change the distance between the arc and the condensing lenses.

Your complaint concerns the lower part of your picture on the screen which you say becomes blurred or discolored. Judging by the complaint I should say that if you would lower your arc lamp slightly so as to bring the arc lower, relative to the condensing lenses, then the spot of light on the aperture of your machine would be slightly elevated, which ought to do away with the blurring and discoloration of light at the bottom of your screen.

You may try to make your spot a little larger by moving the lamp forward from 1/16 inch to ⅛ inch at the time your trouble appears, if it should not be sufficient to lower the lamp as I have mentioned.

I believe your whole trouble is in the adjustment of your arc relative to the condensing lenses and the above suggestions should overcome your trouble.

The 5 inch E. F. lens at the distance of 50 feet makes a comparatively small picture, not much over 7 x 9 feet, but the focus of the lens should have nothing to do with the rainbow effect on your screen, as this is entirely a matter of position and control of your arc.

If you desire further information kindly answer the following questions and the information will be given:

First.—Do you use alternating or direct current?

Second.—State voltate as well as cycles if alternating.

Third.—What means do you use for controlling the current at the arc? That is, do you have a rheostat, or if alternating, do you use some form of transformer or choke coil? In any case, state the make, size and style you are using.

Fourth.—If you generate your own electric current by a small plant, give details and state what is marked on the name plate of the generator.

Fifth.—Give details as to make, size and style of carbons which you are using.

Sixth.—If you are using a special screen, please give information as to the make, style and finish.

CONNECTING TRANSFORMERS IN SERIES ON 220-VOLT CIRCUIT

C. K., Brooklyn, N. Y.—Can in case of emergency two 110 volt transformers be hooked in series and used on a 220 volt circuit? When I get a short on secondary what blows booth fuses? On one occasion when working a Power's inductor, 208 volts, a short in lamp blew meter fuses, why? Thank you for an early answer.

Ans.—If you possess two 110 volt Hallberg Standard type A. C. electric economizers, which are transformers with absolutely separate primary and secondary windings, it is possible to connect these in series on a 220 volt circuit in three different manners as shown in the accompanying illustrations.

Referring to Fig. 1 the line or primary windings are connected in series across the 220 volt supply circuit. Please note that the secondary windings of economizer No. 1 are short circuited, but the secondary windings of economizers No. 2 are to be connected to the carbons. With this combination it is possible to secure for a short time, that is for intermittent work, between 60 and 65 amperes at the arc. This particular connection should not be used for all day runs, but in case of an emergency for an hour or two at the time, there would be no harm to the equipment.

Fig. 2 illustrates another way to connect two separate 110 volt economizers, but in this instance both secondary windings are connected to the circuit which feeds the arc lamps, and with this connection it is possible to get between 80 and 100 amperes at the arc indefinitely for continuous service.

Fig. 3 illustrates another method of connecting two 110 volt Hallberg A. C. economizers on 220 volt line. With this form of connection it is possible to operate one arc on economizer No. 1 and another arc on economizer No. 2, at the same time securing between 40 and 50 amperes at each arc. If one lamp is cut out with the connections as shown in Fig. 3 by operating the switch or separating the carbons it would be possible to secure only about 30 amperes on the remaining arc.

Other style transformers constructed on the same basic principle as the Hallberg A. C. economizer can be similarly connected, but in other types where the secondary and primary windings are interconnected, such as in auto-transformers, the same advantage of connection cannot in all instances be obtained so that the rule given above for the A. C. Hallberg economizer does not hold good for all kinds of compensarcs, compensators and similar devices.

With Hallberg A. C. economizer it is possible to put the carbons together and not below the fuse on the line, providing the fuses of 35 ampere capacity for 110 volts and about 15 to 20 ampere capacity for 220 volts. With any of these devices, however, the fuse may blow if it is of just the capacity required for the transformer when operating normally, because with the short circuited arc there will be an increase in the ampere flow on the line. This increase varies for different makes and types of transformers.

I believe that on the Powers' inductor for 110 volts, if the carbons are short circuited when the switch is on the high notch it will blow a 40 ampere line fuse, and on 220 volts it will blow a 20 ampere line fuse, if the short circuit at the arc is left long enough. The remedy is to use a fuse of 5 ampere higher capacity if you anticipate continual prolonged short circuits.

Under normal conditions, however, these fuses should last as a short circuit is an unexpected and unnecessary occurrence in a well managed projector equipment.

USING 5/8-INCH CARBONS IN CONJUNCTION WITH 3/4-INCH CARBONS

W. P. H., Nunda, N. Y.:—I note and thank you very much for your answer to my question in the December 11 issue of the "News" and I wish to bother you once more for information.

You have advised me to use 3/4 inch carbons and as I have on hand a goodly supply of 5/8 inch carbons I would thank you to advise if I could not manage to use these in connection with the 3/4 inch if the small carbon should be used below or above.

ANSWER.—In view of the fact that you have a large stock of 5/8 inch cored carbons, if they are of good quality, I suggest that you use them for the time being if you want to, by placing them in the upper carbon holder, putting the 3/4 inch carbon below.

Experience proves that with A. C. the lower carbon has to stand the greater abuse. This is just the opposite to the effect with D. C. where the upper positive carbon has to stand considerably more heat than the lower negative.

If you find that the 5/8 inch carbons should not stand up as well as you want it to, then I would advise that you reduce the amperes somewhat on your Edison transformer by changing the adjustment provided for the purpose.

BAIRD MACHINE PROVIDED WITH RELEASE FOR MOTOR DRIVE WHEN OPERATED BY HAND

IN the last week's description of the Edison Super-Kinetoscope, reference was made to the roller clutch, which disengages the motor drive from the machine whenever it is cranked by hand, so as to make it unnecessary to throw off the belt from the motor, as in other make machines.

The manufacturers af the Baird machine advise that the Baird projector is provided with means for disengaging the motor drive from the mechanism when cranking the machine by hand. The statement should have been made that "on the Edison machine the roller clutch works automatically, that is, it disengages itself the moment hand power is applied at the crank or whenever the machine is cranked by hand at a higher rate of speed than that at which the motor would drive it."

The Baird projector is provided with a device operated by a lever immediately under the lower magazine, which tilts the entire motor suspension so that the belt between the motor speed controlling device and the mechanism can be slackened allowing the mechanism to be turned freely by hand.

What Must Be Considered in Building a Balcony

No Other Part of the House Can Be as Expensive to Build if Manager and Architect Fail to Exercise Care—One Country Architect Had Planned to Put in Eighteen Posts Before Consulting a Specialist, Who Designed It for Support with Four Pillars.

THE balcony of the theatre has at all times been given perhaps greater consideration in the design and construction of the amusement house than any particular part of such buildings, except the stage.

Shall the theatre be built with or without a balcony?

Two and only two questions enter into this important consideration, the non-existence of either will at once cause a negative decision. The first is, does the seating capacity required demand the construction of a balcony?

The architect will at all times seek to obtain a maximum number of seats on the orchestra and ground floor, consistent with proper aisle, lobby and promenade space, which must be in proportion to the people using the floor.

If the accommodation thus obtained is sufficient or almost so, a balcony should not be considered for many reasons that will be obvious from what is hereafter detailed.

However, if the capacity thus acquired is not sufficient, then the construction of one or more upper seating spaces must follow.

The second question is more perplexing. Will the amount of money available permit the provision of such extra upper space, and if so will the extra cost be proportionate to the return that might be obtained? There is no part of the house as expensive to build as the balcony.

Effect on Orchestra of Balcony with Posts

We need not look far into the past, and we still find plenty of examples, where many columns supported the balcony. In this way, while many additional seats were secured in the balcony, a number were rendered useless on the more important floor.

The writer only recently acted as consultant to a country architect where the latter had prepared designs for a theatre having but three hundred seats in the balcony and had supported the same with no less than eighteen columns. As the building was of frame construction, and the cost was very limited, a cantilever system of steel construction could not be considered, but with little extra cost, only four columns were finally put in place. This was done while maintaining the wood construction.

We must, therefore, keep in mind that the first essential consideration is least obstruction to view of all parts of the stage or screen for those patrons in the first floor by any balcony supports.

The next essential is maximum seating to the square foot of balcony constructed, consistent with, as on the first floor, proper passage and space for the public, for in this way will the benefit resulting from this extra cost be measured.

In such seating, it need not be mentioned but that every seat must count for one hundred per cent. value. We have seen only too many balcony and even orchestra seats from which little or nothing could be seen.

Exact Slope to Be Obtained

Let us bear in mind the proper slope of the balcony and its relations to the other levels of the house. This is easily determined. There is no magic about determining it, though from the many errors that are constantly made it would appear that it is either an unfathomable problem or that some designers are guilty of gross carelessness.

There is an exact slope to be obtained. There must neither be more nor less than the desired slope. It is essential that such gradient must be at such an angle that each row of patrons will have a clear view over the heads of all others in front as well as over the top of the front rail or parapet of the balcony; so that the line of sight shall fall on the floor of the stage on a line struck by the asbestos curtain of the proscenium opening where a stage is provided, or to the bottom of the screen where only the latter is installed.

Any lesser slope is a most serious defect. Any greater slope is likewise an error, for it will increase the height of the run of the stairs to the balcony, and consequently the cost.

In any locality governed by building ordinances, the owner will find that the installation of a balcony also requires expensive fire escapes and an increase of alley width unless the fire escapes are on a street frontage. The writer recently built a handsome fireproof amusement building wherein it was found that as many seats would be lost to the first floor as would have been gained by the installation of a balcony.

The balcony would have required seven-feet alleys to both sides of the house, which was located on an interior lot, whereas no alleys were demanded by the building department with only a first floor, since emergency exits were obtained to a rear street for the first floor to one side of the screen platform.

The construction of a modern balcony is of steel cantilever trusses, built to other trusses, supported on but few columns, sometimes as few as two and at times without any columns placed to the seating space of the orchestra.

To these are placed fireproof floors after all the steel work is itself fireproofed. Such construction is of necessity expensive and for that reason is not permitted in many problems.

Where the depth of the balcony will permit, an effective treatment is to divide the space so that various price seats may be sold for the same balcony. Loggia box seats may be provided to the front of the balcony, the next section may be termed family circle seats, and the rear or higher level may be termed balcony seats.

Fewer Top Balconies

In this way the top balcony may be avoided, and it is this top balcony that is largely going out of favor with not only the architect and owner, but largely the public.

This change in sentiment has been brought about largely by the moving picture public, who will not climb the extra flights of stairs for about the same price that is charged for the orchestra seats.

The architectural treatment of the house as seen from the balcony is always the best. The writer never attends a new house but that he will spend the time between the acts on the upper balcony, for from there beauties are revealed not discernible from below.

We may often wonder why some architects spread themselves so deeply on that part of the house seen only by the "gallery gods."

The balcony seats must be provided with some consideration as to the class of people that will use them. Steel, all steel, seems to be the cry this day, caused by the abuse they seem to receive.

Balcony seats get the worst usage. The backs are badly kicked, boys rest their feet on top of the backs and on the arms, and the seating workmen often place the seats so close to the riser that the edge of the seat is torn by rubbing against the riser each time it is lowered or raised.

The ailsles and the space to the rear of all seating should be spacious, and it is well not to take the minimum demanded by ordinances.

TWO AUDITORIUMS IN THE DUPLEX, DETROIT, GIVE LATECOMERS CHANCE TO SEE ALL OF FEATURE

ON Wednesday evening, December 15, the Duplex theatre, Detroit, officially opened. This house is situated on the East Grand Boulevard, one hundred feet from Woodward, and is owned by the Grand Boulevard Theatre Company, of which the following are the officers:

Fred A. Aldrich, president; J. B. Kennedy, vice-president; Harry Hulbert, treasurer; and Arthur Bergeron, secretary. H. M. Payne is general manager, and Earl Hennessy is house manager. The Duplex contains two auditoriums, each adjoining the other, but divided by a sound-proof wall, and each seating 750 people.

There is a long lobby or foyer which connects both theatres. The one admission admits you to both theatres, which are under the same roof. The Duplex idea originated with Fuller Claflin, architect in the Elks Temple Building, and he is now working on similar theatres for other theatres.

The Duplex idea has been copyrighted by Mr. Claflin. Each theatre has its own stage, its own projection booth, and is a complete theatre. The object of the two auditoriums being this; no matter what time you enter, you can see the feature from the beginning. After the feature once starts, no more people are admitted to that particular auditorium, but are ushered into theatre No. 2 where the shorter reels are shown.

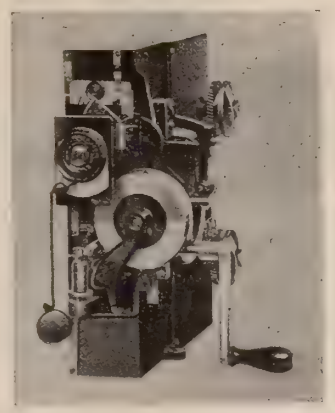
As soon as the feature is completed in theatre No. 1 it starts at No. 2 and then no more people are admitted to theatre No. 2. In this way, the patron sees the feature from the beginning no matter what time he comes in.

Mr. Hennessy has secured first-run rights on V-L-S-E features and Gold Rooster Pathé features. Prices are ten, fifteen and twenty-five, and there are four shows daily, two in the afternoon and two at night. Detroit is the only theatre in the world to have a Duplex theatre. Its success naturally will be watched with considerable interest throughout the country.

THE REGENT, THIRD IN CHAIN OF INDEPENDENT AMUSEMENT COMPANY, MONTREAL, WILL HAVE $18,000 VENTILATING PLANT

THE Independent Amusements Company, of Montreal, of which George Nicholas is managing director, makes a very interesting announcement of the opening of its new house, in Montreal, the Regent. This theatre, which is the third in a chain of high class houses which the company is building, will be opened next month.

It is the finest of the houses built by the Independent company, which also erected the Moulin Rouge, on St. Catherines street, East Montreal, and the Strand, one of the most favored of theatres in the eastern metropolis of Canada.



The Regent will seat 1,200 people and includes in its modern appointments a cooling and ventilating plant that has cost over $18,000 to install. This system will keep a 50 degree temperature during the hottest weather in summer and will allow a thorough ventilation during the winter months, with whcih Montreal is lavishly blessed.

The terra cotta front has been carefully handled, so that it has all the appearance of a six-story building, while the giant clock, which is part of an electric automatic sign, hung on the front, is seven feet in diameter, from which the time may be read over a mile away. The Regent is situated at the transfer point of Laurier and Park avenues.

IN our last issue of the "NEWS" at the end of the decription of the Edison Super-Kinetoscope, credit was given to L. C. McChesney, as being in charge of the sales organization.

We wish to correct this statement by advising that L. C. McChesney is in charge of the publicity and L. W. McChesney is in charge of the sales organization.

PHOTOPLAY THEATRE CONSTRUCTION IN VARIOUS STATES

THE Peerless, a new theatre at 1907 South Broadway, St. Louis, is about completed, and will be ready for business soon. The Peerless will have a seating capacity of 1,000. J. Martin, who is operating the Carroll theatre, at Carroll and Broadway, will be in charge of the new house, although he will continue to run the Carroll also.

Freund Brothers, who built the Peerless, had intended at first to build a neighborhood legitimate theatre on the site of the Peerless, but the popularity of pictures decided them to erect a strictly picture house.

The Cinderella, on Cherokee and Iowa avenues, St. Louis, is soon to have the addition of a new portico in front, as well as two hundred more seats in the already large auditorium. The stage setting is also to be altered to come up to the esthetic taste of Manager Freund.

Fred Wehrenberg, president of the St. Louis Exhibitors' League, and manager of the Best theatre, at Jefferson and Cherokee, is away on his annual hunting trip at High Ridge.

The Cherokee theatre was turned over to a South St. Louis dramatic and dancing entertinment on December 11. Edward Westfield, manager of the house, usually divides his program about equally between dramatic performances and pictures.

Nebraska Exhibitors Buy and Sell

Hillman and Sandlovich have taken over the Alpine, at Lincoln, from D. Eager.

Lembach and Weise have opened a new theatre at Lexington. They had a band give concerts about the streets on opening day and their house was packed.

A force of decorators have been at work on the Besse theatre, giving it a thorough renovating, repainting and redecorating. Manager George Adkins had a large force at work. He has the theatre redecorated twice a year.

D. C. Doyle, owner of the Gem, at Minden, has taken over the Dreamland from Oscar Persons.

The Lyric, a $25,000 house at Fremont, owned by Raitt and Terry, recently burned. They carried $15,000 insurance.

S. E. Gilinsky is planning to build a 700-seating-capacity motion picture theatre at Forty-ninth and Dodge streets, Omaha.

F. N. Dorland, at Peru, has sold the Crystal to A. M. McCommons.

H. H. Dimmitt has bought the Lyric, Wymore, from A. P. Ake.

Alvis Slapicka, of Wilbur, has opened a picture house there called The Chicken Show.

The Lily, a reverse front theatre at Lincoln, has been remodeled by William Burne, who bought it from F. C. Armstrong.

Out of forty motion picture theatres in Omaha, eleven charge ten cents admission, the others five cents.

O. R. Bennett has taken over the new $22,000 Hamilton theatre, Fortieth and Hamilton streets, Omaha, and will remodel the front. There are stores on both sides, and Bennett feels something distinguished looking is needed about the theatre to raise it above its surroundings.

M. Aaronson, manager of the New Star, Sixteenth and Locust streets, Omaha, has installed a new motor generator and Power's 6-A machine complete. He opened the theatre early in December, last year.

On December 1 the Rohlff theatre on Leavenworth street, Omaha, was opened with Maurice Miltenberger as manager and A. A. Watts as owner. The new house seats three hundred people.

New Jersey Has New 1,500-Seat House in Newark

Another playhouse was added to Newark's chain of amusement resorts, with the opening Wednesday, December 15, of the City theatre, in the Roseville section, at the intersection of North Seventh and Orange streets.

The theatre is operated by the E. M. Amusement Company, under the personal management of I. Boyland. It has a seating capacity of 1,500, with spacious orchestra, boxes and balcony. Triangle service has been provided.

The National Theatre Company has awarded to Wells Construction Company, of New York, the general contract for the erection of a brick theatre to be built in the west side of Central avenue, near Bleecker street, Jersey City. Charles E. Horn, the architect, places the cost at $55,186.

CALIFORNIA

THE theatre at Fifth and Los Angeles streets, Los Angeles, formerly known as the Grove, has been re-opened by Silverman and Kramer, who have renamed it the Jewel.

Al. E. Tiede has purchased the Starland theatre at Orange, which has been closed for some time, remodeled it and installed new machines. It was opened during the past week under the name of the Electric.

A contract has been awarded for the construction of a moving picture theatre to be erected for A. F. Werum on Foothill Boulevard, Oakland, at an estimated cost of $18,000. The building will be of brick construction, one story in height.

The Hermosa theatre, at Hermosa Beach, has been closed by C. D. Barlow, and will be reopened as soon as extensive repairs and alterations have been completed.

J. O. Grant, of Beaumont, has taken over the Banning Opera House, at Banning, under a long lease.

The Isis theatre, at Truckee, is now owned and operated by Smith and Bowen.

H. D. Lester has disposed of his airdome at Tulare to Cain and Ferguson, of the Theatre Tulare.

The Gem theatre, at Petaluma, which was recently closed, has been renovated throughout and re-opened by its owner, Taylor Squires.

The Viola theatre, at Hollister, is now being operated under the management of Mrs. M. H. Murray.

Plans are being drawn for a new theatre at Grass Valley to be known as the Pavilion theatre. A. Saxon is the builder.

The Happy Hour theatre, at Grass Valley, has been opened as the Cosy Corner Nickelodeum.

A pleasure pier, with a large moving picture theatre, is to be erected at Ocean Park by Leon Fighiera.

CANADA

There is at present a regular and persistent invigoration of the motion picture business in Ontario. New theatres are opening in almost every city, and houses are re-opening in towns which have long lain dormant. Mr. Clark is opening the Model theatre in Stayner. Henry Moore has opened a house in Westport, and it is rumored that the Crown theatre in Bridgeburg will reopen for business shortly.

This condition is reflected by the activities around the exchanges, many of which state that business was never better.

Toronto is to have another large moving picture theatre, if the plans formulated by several gentlemen are consummated. These men, who are well known in local legal circles, have decided that there is more money in entertaining the people than prosecuting them, and are negotiating for a site on Queen street, west, one of the main thoroughfares in the Canadian city.

It has been learned on good authority that the Crescent theatre, a trim little suburban house in Toronto, will shortly change hands and come under the joint management of a member of the local censor board and another man well known in film circles.

Manager James W. Pilling, of the Orpheum, in Vancouver, who announced last week that he would soon leave for Calgary, has been induced to withdraw his resignation, and will continue in charge of the local house.

CONNECTICUT

John F. Sullivan, of New York, who bought the Park theatre, South Manchester, from James Goldman, the owner, has taken charge of the house.

ILLINOIS

The Savoy motion picture theatre at Suringfield, owned by Gus Kerasotes, was badly damaged by fire recently. As soon as the insurance is adjusted, Mr. Kerasotes will remodel the theatre.

William J. Beynon, of Divernon, has completed improvements on his motion picture theatre.

Ellis Bostick, owner of the Court theatre, at Pekin, has enlarged his playhouse and added one hundred and fifty more seats. He also has installed a 6-B Powers' machine.

James Cardoni has made a number of improvements at his motion picture theatre in Riverton.

A. Woykof, owner of a new picture theatre at Springfield, and C. B. Burkhardt, who conducts a theatre at Homer, have purchased Minusa screens through the Springfield Co-operative Amusement and Supply Company.

A. Valliere has opened a new motion picture theatre at Bath.

Earl Drone has opened a new motion picture house at Pawnee.

The Avoy thearte, at Moline, has been enlarged and has installed consderable new equipment.

Edinburg will shortly have a new motion picture theatre. It is to be opened by a man named Price, who is in the hardware business there.

A motion picture theatre is in course of construction in Decatur.

A. J. Marshall, proprietor of the Empress theatre at Springfield, is already making arrangements for opening an airdome next summer on the lot adjoining his theatre.

T. E. Epperly, owner of the Coliseum at Talulla, has taken personal charge of the theatre and now is showing motion pictures.

The Strand theatre, a new picture house, has opened at Aurora, and is showing the Triangle program.

INDIANA

The Alhambra theatre, Indianapolis, has been undergoing a remodeling. It is owned by Barton and Olsen, and about $5,000 has been spent in enlarging the balcony, changing the front entrance with doors opening directly in front of the theatre instead of on each side, and adding about two hundred seats. The work has been done in the morning and at night, after the shows.

R. A. Cannan has again taken over the Theatorium, at Newcastle. Ernest Hodgsett will manage the theatre for the present.

As the plans for the Circle theatre, in Monument Place, Indianapolis, are being drawn by Rubush and Hunter, architects, the builders of the new motion picture house believe that the designers are preparing for Indianapolis one of the largest and finest theatres of the State. The new theatre, in appearance and plans, will introduce some fresh ideas in suructures of the kind in Indianapolis.

It will cost about $225,000, and with the large site it is to occupy, will represent an investment of about $500,000. It will not only be fireproof, but so arranged with a large lobby and broad aisles that it can take care of large crowds.

The architects are keeping it within the lines of architectural dignity that will harmonize with the Soldiers' Monument, which it will face.

Around the Circle the business men are welcoming the coming of the new theatre. They believe that it will make the circular street a still more popular pathway with pedestrians.

The State fire marshal's office has notified the Moose Lodge, at Warsaw, that certain changes will be necessary in the opera house which the lodge owns. The cost of the changes is estimated at $1,500.

An $8,000 pipe organ has been purchased by Manager Robert Hudson, of the Palace theatre, at Richmond.

V. U. Young, of Gary, pioneer motion picture exhibitor of that city, has bought control of the Twentieth Century at Gary. He has leased it from Harry Hall. He now has four theatres in Gary, the Orpheum, Art, Grand and Twentieth Century.

A new Seeburg player has been bought by H. H. Hornbeck, manager of the New Majestic theatre, Monticello.

The Triangle program is to be shown at the New Majestic theatre at Evansville.

The Dreamland theatre, at Winchester, has been closed because of differences between Mrs. Anna Newbauer, the owner of the building, and Jordan brothers, who have been managing it.

The Arc theatre, at Marengo, of which J. Shaw Grimes is manager, is to give shows every Wednesday and Saturday instead of once a week.

The New Link theatre, at Walkerton, has been opened.

IOWA

G. G. Wilcoxon, of Farragut, has just completed installing a new projection outfit in his theatre.

Steve Green, manager of the Opera House at Hamburg, has added vaudeville to his motion picture show. He charges ten cents admission.

Mart and Son is the name of a firm which just opened the Star, a motion picture theatre, in Grinnell.

Morgan Brothers have purchased the Lyric theatre at Harlan. They have just completed making improvements to the house, including the addition of seats.

Wonder and Hatt have started showing pictures in the opera house at Onawa. The place seats five hundred, and they have it nearly filled every evening.

A smallpox embargo on Cherokee, which included pictures as well as everything else, has been lifted.

E. C. Piper, manager of the Empress, Malvern, gave the entire proceeds of his house on December 7 to a fund being raised for a library. Over five hundred people attended in the one evening.

Robert Miller, manager of the Orpheum, Centerville, recently gave a benefit night for the firemen.

L. P. Todd, of Mt. Ayre, has sold his interest in the motion picture house there.

W. A. Matthies has bought the Empress, Cedar Falls, from M. C. Clinton.

The Garden theatre, a new house in Iowa City, has been opened by T. A. Hanlon. He formerly owned the Iowa, one of Iowa City's first motion picture theatres.

Dr. E. H. Allen has taken over the opera house, now a motion picture theatre, at Cresco.

The Electric theatre, at West Union, has been closed.

Johnson Brothers have remodeled and enlarged the Princess, at Ida Grove.

G. L. Meholm is building the Empress, at Rockwell City, and expects to have it completed during the Christmas holidays.

J. E. Easton plans to open the opera house at Ida Grove on January 1 as a motion picture theatre.

R. Snell, of Clinton, known throughout the State, will build a large house at Fort Dodge next to the Wahkonsa Hotel, one of the finest locations in the city.

A new theatre is now being completed at Forest City.

C. E. Carragher has bought the Palm, Clear Lake, from B. N. Bopp.

William Klatt, manager of the Palk, Calmar, a town of less than 1,000 people, has been doing an unusual thing in running features exclusively.

R. D. Fellows has bought from N. Neff part interest in the Cozy theatre, at West Union. H. F. Becker has sold the new firm the entire fixtures of the Electric, now closed.

M. H. Gribble has sold the Grand, Cedar Falls, to George Still. Mr. Still has sold the Lyric, Independence, to A. H. Brooks, and is giving all his time to the Cedar Falls house.

F. Porter, of Bussing, has bought the Star, at Tama.

H. A. Spencer has taken over the Star at Knoxville. It is reported the Olympic has also changed hands.

Fred Lambert has sold the King theatre, Albia, to F. J. Kissick.

Cliff Niles has opened the opera house at Anamosa as a picture and vaudeville house.

Mr. Pelton has taken Hedrickson's place in the firm of Georgen and Hedrickson, owners of the Crystal, at Anamosa.

ment Company is erecting in the third block on East Douglas avenue, will be opened to the public on January 5, according to L. M. Miller, manager.

Permission to erect a $10,000 theatre and business building at 506-508 Kansas avenue, Topeka, has been secured from the city fire marshal by Abe Jacobson. The building will be constructed of stone and brick and is to be completed about March 1.

KENTUCKY

According to present plans, the Masonic theatre, Louisville, formerly a legitimate house, will be opened about the first of the year as a first-class motion picture theatre. It is reported that the firm of McRae Brothers, consisting of R. V. McRae and M. A. McRae, of Detroit, has leased the house.

The firm will make a number of improvements and will feature the orchestra.

D. R. Riddell, of the Lyric theatre, and N. M. Elliott, of the Palace and Majestic theatres, at Corbin, have formed a partnership under the name of Riddell and Elliott. It is probable that the Palace will be closed while the Lyric will be operated as a picture house and the Majestic devoted to vaudeville. R. E. Gum, former manager of the Palace, has severed his connection with the concern.

The White theatre, Scottsville, has been purchased by R. R. Pitchford. It will be operated as a motion picture house under the management of C. E. Bankston.

MAINE

Bangor is to have a new motion picture house with the opening of the Winter Garden, as the big hall in the new Morse Building is called, on New Year's day. E. P. Murray, formerly connected with one of the local film exchanges, is to be the manager, and he plans to present musical and dramatic attractions, interspersing them with first-class motion pictures.

The new Colonial theatre, in Saco, will be open about January 10.

MARYLAND

The Empire Theatre Company, of Frederick, operating the Empire, has entered into an agreement with Pearce and Scheck, of Baltimore, lessees of the City Opera House there, whereby the Frederick company takes over the opera house and operates both places.

Permit was issued by the building inspector of Baltimore to the Howard Amusement Company for a one-story moving picture theatre at 404-406 North Howard street. The plans call for a building 37 feet 5 inches by 121 feet.

MASSACHUSETTS

William F. Savage was recently appointed manager of the Opera House at Hudson.

Robert F. Keene, of the Colonial theatre on West Elm street, Brockton, has purchased the Whitman moving picture house at the corner of West and Washington streets, Whitman, of A. I. Randall, of Rockland, and will take possession December 18. Mr. Keene was the former owner of the house and sold it about a year ago to Mr. Randall.

Damage of $1,000 was done to the equipment of the Lyric moving picture theatre and the Dewey block, in which it is situated, on Pleasant street, Northampton, recently.

MICHIGAN

The Hotel Wenonah property, Pontiac, has been leased by Detroit capitalists, who contemplate the erection of a motion picture theatre on the site.

The Orpheum theatre, Main street, Kalamazoo, reopened December 11. The new owners are P. F. Marquette and P. C. Schram. The theatre has been entirely remodeled.

The Lyric theatre, Saginaw and Water streets, Flint, has been sold by the Kobackers to E. J. Stanton, who now runs the Royal theatre. Mr. Stanton will make a number of improvements.

The Butler theatre, Ishpeming, opened on December 23.

MISSOURI

The St. Louis Amusement Company, composed of a number of well-known business men, opened the Ritz theatre, on Sixth at Olive street. St. Louis, on December 11. The policy of the house is that one member of the company will take it upon himself to personally censor every film before its public exhibition, even if the film has passed all other boards of censorship extant.

Music and the Picture

Edited by Ernst Luz

This department is maintained for the exhibitor's assistance with a view of suggesting proper musical illustrations for current photo plays. MOTION PICTURE NEWS will be pleased to help solve any difficulties the exhibitors may have with their musical programs. All communications should be addressed to the Music and the Picture Department.

WHAT TO DO WHEN MUSIC SYNOPSIS DOES NOT ACCOMPANY PICTURE

Howard, F. A., Fredericktown, Ohio.—As the leader of an orchestra for picture house work, I wish to know, how is it possible to make out a program of music, well adapted to follow a picture with, unless there is a synopsis and musical program sent with the picture. Suppose the leader has not ample time to see the film or review it before the time for the film to be shown, in order that he can make out his part of the program, so as to fallow the film with proper musical setting.

EDITOR'S NOTE.—There is a way of overcoming this and it is the duty of every leader or musician who is interested or consciencious in his work to do his part in agitating some method of musically programing a picture in advance without seeng the film.

Producers of film are receiving requests for musical plots from all over the country and are all thinking very seriously of the same. It only remains for them to realize that such work correctly done is worth money to them and the exhibitor, to have it become a fact.

Severe criticism has made every previous attempt at music plots a failure and we should treat kindly with every plot sent to us and instead of ridiculing it, we should endeavor to take the producers of film into our confidence with a view of improving the musical plots as much as possible.

The first to be accomplished, is that some musical plot accompany each feature picture that is released. This once accomplished, the perfecting of these plots will be no more difficult than was the wonderful improvement seen in pictures of today as compared with a few years past.

Every musician or leader should discuss this subject rationally with their respective exhibitors or managers, who in turn should present their views to the manufacturers.

Every end must have a beginning and the start is what we should be after now. After there is a true realization of the value of music plots among the trade, there is no doubt that every care will be taken to make them as perfect as knowledge and talent will permit, regardless of expense, for we can rest assured that until plots or suggestions cost real money to produce the musician's worries will not be lessened and the exhibitor will derive little financial benefit.

At the present time there are plots or suggestions issued for Pathé, Paramount, V-L-S-E, World, Equitable and Metro.

Had I sufficient time I would be glad to help all with plots for their pictures, knowing that unless plots are used, music and the picture will never be a real success.

WOMAN LEADS MEN'S ORCHESTRA IN THE JEFFERSON, PHILADELPHIA

THE Jefferson, at Twenty-ninth and Dauphin streets, Philadelphia, has contracted for the Triangle program for its territory, to run four days each week.

Jack Delmar, manager, of the Jefferson, contemplates extensive improvements at an early date. Meantime a new Pilcher organ has been already installed. A full orchestra is run in connection with the organ. A rather novel feature is the woman leader of a men's orchestra. Bertha Greenblatt, a well-known musician, leads the orchestra and also presides at the organ.

Mr. Delmar directs the Bell in addition to the Jefferson.

The Idle Hour, at West Chester, Pa., a suburban town near Philadelphia, is run by Becker and Woolston. The theatre, which accommodates 800, has just installed a style U Wurlitzer organ.

Professor Harry A. Crisp, of Philadelphia, gave recitals in celebration of the fact, quite an event in the town. Farrar's "Carmen" was run two nights as an additional celebration.

The Cedar theatre, at Sixtieth and Cedar streets, West Philadelphia, A. M. Taylor, manager, has recently added a Wurlitzer organ to its equipment.

SPECIAL MUSIC PREPARED FOR "BLACK CROOK"

"THE BLACK CROOK," Kalem's five part picturization of the extravaganza of the same name, will have specially written music scores. The arrangement is now being made by Walter C. Simmons.

Besides many original compositions, it will include the best known of the melodies that were a part of the famous stage production. Every foot of the screen offering will have its specially synchronized musical accompaniment. The score will be supplied to exhibitors at fifty cents.

Every theatre owner and manager, as well as every musician, has his own idea as to just how pictures should be played and what is necessary in order to make his house popular from a musical standpoint.

Some realize that their knowledge and experience properly treated and set forth will be of value to others who may not enjoy their success, but they do not know how to make their suggestions of benefit to others.

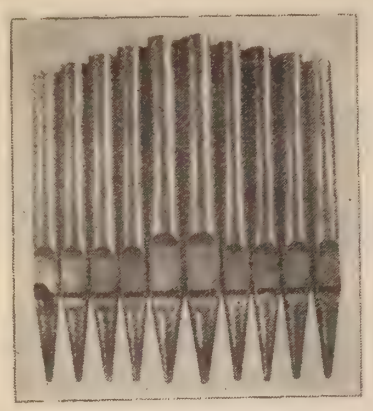
There are also those who want help and these are perhaps the majority. Yet they do not know where or how to get this assistance.

* * * * *

The Music Department of the "News" is for just this purpose.

We will publish the opinions of any of our readers, or we will answer any of their questions; in fact, we are here for the express purpose of promoting better picture music.

Mr. Luz is an expert. It is because of his knowledge that several houses, which in the past have failed, are now making wonderful successes.



Why not take advantage of his knowledge?

* * * * *

Manufacturers of musical instruments and music accessories are also invited and requested to send in to this department news items, descriptions, etc., of anything new which is being placed upon the market and which will be of interest to motion picture theatre owners.

This department is open to all.

LIBERTY THEATRE, PITTSBURGH, TO HAVE $10,000 AUSTIN ORGAN

Pittsburgh, Pa., Dec. 16.

ALL the arrangements have been completed for the opening of the new Liberty theatre which is rapidly being fitted out in Penn avenue, East Liberty. It is to be the finest motion picture theatre in the Pittsburgh district, and was erected by Nicola Brothers.

The theatre is to have a seating capacity of 1,467, and when it is thrown open to the public on December 27 will add one more fine amusement house to this district.

The East Liberty Amusement Company is the name of the owner of the theatre, and the building is located on a lot 100 feet front and 179 feet deep. It is to be managed by Raymond H. Allen, a young man well versed in the amusement business.

Sturdevant ventilating system has been installed and three Baird projection machines have also been put into one of the roomiest booths that is to be found in any theatre in the United States. The throw is sixty feet and a gold fibre screen will be used.

A $10,000 Austin organ is rapidly being put in place, and one of the best organists in the city of Pittsburgh has been engaged to render the music during the afternoon and evenings. The Triangle service will be used exclusively in the theatre. The prices charged will be ten, fifteen and twenty-five cents.

NEARLY A FOURTH OF OPERATORS IN CLEVELAND GET INCREASE

OPERATORS in Cleveland motion picture theatres have shared in the general increase in wages secured by nearly one-fourth of the union men employed in Ohio, according to a report just filed with the State industrial commission.

Reports were compiled from figures submitted by officers of labor unions in Cleveland, Cincinnati, Columbus and other cities. The figures are appended:

Ten-hour-a-day shows, $17.50 per week, an increase of $2.50 per week; twelve-hour-a-day shows, $21 per week, an increase of $2.50 per week; fourteen-hour-a-day shows, $23.50, an increase of $2.50 per week; and sixteen-hour-a-day shows, $27.50 per week, an increase of $2.50 per week.

OPERATORS UNION IN WILKES-BARRE INCREASES MEMBERSHIP

THE operators organization in Wilkes-Barre, Pa., is steadily increasing. Several new members have been taken in and the association is now on a firm basis. The following men have been elected as officers for the ensuing year:

President, Frank Walsh; vice-president, Robert Piatt; financial secretary, Clyde Colman; corresponding secretary and treasurer, William Piatt; business agent, Frank Walsh; sergeant at arms, Joseph Moser; trustees, Edward Parsons, James Garvin and Wesley Knetter; executive board, Frank Walsh, Robert and William Piatt and Clyde Colman; representative to Central Labor Union, Frank Walsh; representative to Wilkes-Barre City examining board, William Piatt.

GOLD KING SCREEN COMPANY ENLARGES PLANT

THE fast growing demand for Gold King Screens and their increasing popularity among exhibitors in all parts of the country have compelled the Gold King Screen Co., of Altus, Okla., to seek additional factory space for the manufacture of their screens.

In addition to the three buildings already occupied by this concern, President S. H. Jones has just leased another two-story brick building fifty by one hundred and fifty feet to relieve the congested condition in the balance of the plant. This will facilitate the turning out of large screens more promptly than heretofore.

JONES, OF GOLD KING SCREEN COMPANY, ON TRIP IN NORTH AND EAST

PRESIDENT S. H. JONES, of Gold King screen fame, is on an extended trip through the North and East. While away he will call upon the heads of the leading motion picture theatre supply houses, with a view of establishing new distributors for the Gold King screen.

Music Notes.—You will find this an entirely different picture to play from most others. While it is strictly romantic, the action is light and unsophisticated. A glance at the description of music might make you believe that the action was of sensational character, which is not true, for the picture is positive romance with some light comedy injected.

You should be sure that your numbers are sweet and pleasing and never of dramatic effect with exception of Nos. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11 and 12, which illustrate a series of storm scenes which are necessary only to bring in immediate contact the previously introduced character.

Nos. 26 and 27 illustrate a fire scene and has no immediate bearing on the story and simply accentuates the worthy character of the lover. These scenes are better illustrated by dramatic numbers, such as are suggested in the plot. Nos. 1 and 16 should be classy caprices, as they illustrate the caprices of an unsophisticated girl.

Nos. 2, 20, 25 and 28 should be light intermezzos. Must be musically sweet. Nos. 4, 17 and 23 must be very light gallops, not noisy; 23 accompanies a coaching scene and there can be nothing better than a Post Horn number.

No. 27 can be a heavier gallop, illustrating excitement at a fire. Nos. 5 and 18 should be classy waltzes with short slow introductions. Nos. 6 and 24 should be slow, quiet numbers with positive romantic suggestion. Nos. 19 and 29 are positive suggestions of "The Rosemary," for remembrance, upon which the story is based and the song "Rosemary," by Bartlett, as published by Ditson and Company, can be used to good advantage.

This number is not published for orchestra, but it can be used as organ solo or for violin alone to good effect. Nos. 13 and 21 must be medium slow waltzes played very legato. No. 14 is the finish of the storm, but to avoid the effect becoming tiresome it can be more musically illustrated by an intermezzo of hurried effect. The one suggested is very good. No. 22 is a Post Horn trumpet effect or imitation.

While the plot makes the picture appear light, nevertheless organists or one-man orchestra players will find it a simple and very good picture to play. The picture player student will readily see the opportunity for musical color and programing in the possible temperamental changes.
